ELECTRICITY AS A PLAYTHING.

There is, and with good reason, a wholesome fear present in the minds of most persons when they are brought in contact with electric power sufficiently strong to be conspicuous in demonstration. There is a sense of dread as in the presence of what are called supernatural manifestations, and there is still another fear made lively by the uses to which electricity has been put for voluntarily and accidentally inflicting death. But the experimenting inventors play with electricity. Not in a sense of idling away time, but in the sense of handling it without fear. In a New York paper a writer, who was evidently new to such sensations, describes an evening a party of ladies and gentlemen of the Electro-Therapeutic association enjoyed in the workshop of Nikola Tesla, the electrician and inventor who has astonished the scientific world by permitting 250,000 volts of electricity to pass through him without harm. The report is written in a light vein, but with no apparent desire to overdraw the conditions as shown. Nikola has discovered the art of transmitting electricity without a wire, and promises to make sunshine as soon as he discovers how to safely care for the 8,000,000 volts necessary for that purpose.

During that electric evening 800,000 volts were let loose from intricate apparatus, and whirled about the big and grimy machine shop on coils fastened to the walls. The air hummed and throbbled with the tremendous energy. Voices were drowned, ears were dinned and the visitors were filled so full of static electricity that sparks came when they touched knuckles, and the little arc lamps fastened on hand cirentes held over head were illumined simply by holding them parallel with the coils about the room. And then the room was darkened, and the magician gave his visitors a taste of what he humorously calls electric fireworks. He filled glass rods with soft and beautiful light without bringing them into direct contact with any circuit, but simply by filling the room so full of static force that it gathered in the pretty crystal zigzags and made them luminous. As one of the learned doctors put it in terms poetical, it was a molecular bombardment, and about the prettiest thing in electric that one could well imagine.

Then the professor passed round a sheaf of long glass rods about the thickness of macaroni, but twice as long; and filling a great ball hanging from the ceiling with the wondrous and mysterious force, which men are just beginning to learn about, and which the wise ones say is the sunlight and the source of all life, he soon had his guests making fireworks, each on his own account, for each rod was filled with the throbbing, phosphorescent light, and the darkened room was turned into a veritable fairyland. And, the learned ladies of the Electro-Therapeutical society, who know more about anatomy and physiology and the healing power of electricity than a whole library of books, and who can talk in four syllables without a tremor, giggled and screamed, and would not touch the instruments that gave funny little shocks until they had been gently taken in hand by the masculine electro-therapeuticians - just as if they were mere school girls learning the A B Cs of electricity instead of learned doctors and professorines.

And then the expert demonstrated how easy it was to play with lightning. In his own words the ease of the feat is shown: "When I stand before an audience and receive into my body a charge of electricity of 250,000 voltage power I do it to show how harmless this agent can be made with proper handling. I am enabled to accomplish this feat by the use of alternating currents, and any able-bodied man not unusually sensitive to electric force can perform the same feat if he will use the same machine that I do. I have simply learned how to put the harness on that amount of electricity. But 2,000 volts from any other machine would kill me as quickly as it killed Kemmler at Sing Sing." And thus the study goes on, and as the uses of electricity multiply, its terrors decrease.

THE REPUBLICAN city convention has been called for April 16. There is talk of a citizens' convention on the 15th. Too much care in the selection of candidates cannot be exercised.

THE SATURDAY Review's coupons are not accumulating to any great extent at the office of the board of supervisors. If the Review would devote more time to making itself a newspaper and less in trying to evade the law it would not be compelled to come out, as it does now, a reprint of the Gazette. The matter is readable enough in the Gazette, but it is rather stale when it appears the next week in the Review.

One of Lincoln's Answers. Speaking in a recent speech of certain Washington experiences in Lincoln's time, Mr. Depew said: "While I was there Mr. John Ganson, of Buffalo, was a member of congress. His face and his head were hairless and polished like a billiard ball. He was a democrat, but supported the president. The conditions of the army were very blue in the east and in the west. Ganson came in one day and said: 'Mr. President, I am risking my reelection in supporting your wares. The campaign seems very unsatisfactory. Of course I will not give out anything you tell me. What is the situation at the front?' Mr. Lincoln, in his searching and sad way, looked at him for a moment as if he were about to reveal the secret of the whole army, and then tumbled Ganson out of the reception room by saying: 'Ganson, how clean you shave.'"

The First Metal. Gold, because it was found pure and fairly tractable, was probably the first metal used by man. Copper, it is true, is found as a metal, but only in one comparatively restricted locality. Occasionally gold fish hooks have been discovered in graves in New Granada. In mining a tunnel in Canca a gold hook was found in 1882 fifty feet under the surface of the ground and beneath what must have the bed of a river. Copper fish hooks have been found in many of the ancient burial mounds of Peru.

COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL. NEARLY all the gum arabic of commerce comes from the great Sahara desert. FRANK H. MASON, United States consul at Frankfurt, has submitted a report, showing loss in the wheat trade, due to the competition of the Argentine Republic. BEAUREGARD WILSON, who lives near Yazoo City, Miss., worked nine mules the last year and made 399 bales of cotton. After disposing of his crop at an average of five cents a pound and paying his expenses his net profit amounted to $3,950. MONTANA last year made great progress in the diversification of her farming interests, and she succeeded so well that her cities were supplied with hogs from her own borders, her exports of potatoes were three thousand tons, and in the growing of fruits and berries there has been a most excellent start. -Northwestern Magazine, St. Paul.
