The Great Trials of History

TRIAL OF WHITAKER WRIGHT

The life, trial and tragic death of Whitaker Wright is well remembered by most readers. The story of this promoter's career reads like a page of fiction. Mr. Wright was an Englishman, who had long resided in America, where he had accumulated quite a fortune. At three o'clock in the afternoon of January 26, 1904, the famous promoter was sentenced to seven years penal servitude and one hour later he lay dead on the floor of a small room in the law court, the result of poison administered by himself.

The astonishing career of Whitaker Wright, as a promoter, began in Philadelphia, where he lived from 1880 to 1881, and where he made his first million as a broker in cotton, grain and petroleum. Shortly after he returned to England he became the friend and fawner of those who sit in the "seats of the mighty." When he was caught in the toils of justice for looting Establishment of a hundred million dollars, he boasted that he was immune from punishment because "The King of England is my friend."

Wright floated no less than eleven companies in England, financial, mineral and railway. When the financial crash of the Wright companies came in December, 1902, Whitaker found that his boasted friendship with the king did not stand for as much as he expected it would and in February, 1903, he left England for America with his niece, Miss Brown, under the assumed name of Andromedon. When he reached New York on February 15, he was immediately arrested on an English order of prosecution for fraud which had at last been issued after the House of Commons had taken the matter up.

How much money Wright made out of his victims has never been fully known, but he was able to live in princely style at Park Lane, London, in a miniature palace which it took three years to complete. At Godalming he owned a country seat, in the beautifying of which 600 workmen were engaged. His private yacht was fitted with the utmost luxuriosity.

Among the victims of Wright in London were the Marquis of Dufferin, the Duke of Connaught, a brother of King Edward, Right Hon. Arthur Balfour, premier of Great Britain; the Earl of Warwick, Lord William Bessford, and many others. The many companies he floated represented a grand total in money of $11,775,000.

When Wright was arrested in New York he was held until extradition papers arrived on June 1, 1903, and after long legal wrangles in the courts Mr. Wright abandoned his resistance and on July 7 extradition was granted.

On August 4 he arrived in England. The next day he was charged at Guildhall with various crimes, the main one of which was with reporting certain material particulars with "intent to deceive and defraud the members, shareholders and creditors and which the accused knew to be false." The court was lined to sit at 11 o'clock, and at twenty minutes before that hour Wright took his place. He, with his solicitor, Mr. G. Lewis, upon the arrival of Alderman Smallwood, took a seat in front of the dock. After various legal arguments, the outcome was that Wright was liberated on a bail of $200,000.

The case dragged on for some time, with no further developments worthy of note. Sir Rufus Isaacs was the head of a formidable array of counsel for the prosecution. It was not until January 11, 1904, that the English government was able to bring the greatest swindler and promoter of modern times before the bar for a final passing of judgment upon him. The case was continued for six days, and on the seventh Mr. Wright appeared in the witness box and related the story of his life in America and of his promotions in England until the disaster of 1899. He admitted that, while managing director of one company he would sell to himself as managing director of another. When the crash came he held only 2,500 shares of the London & Globe Corporation.

OPEN FORUM FOR DEBATING STATE WIDE PROHIBITION

The very important issue of state-wide prohibition has been raised. A campaign in favor of a constitutional amendment will be shortly instituted. This, like all other important questions has two sides, on each of which are found honest and intelligent persons.

The Republican has decided to provide for a reasonable discussion of this issue in its pages, allowing to each side at least a half column daily for signed articles, for which there will be no charge. No anonymous article will be published.

It is only stipulated that the communications for and against prohibition be just and fair and that in no case shall there be any wild and extravagant statement that will in any way reflect upon the reputation of Phoenix for good order.

It is suggested by The Republican that either side, desiring to avail itself of this offer of space, name a committee through which all matter relating to the issue shall be transmitted. In such case, all communications received at this office from other sources will be rejected. We believe that this arrangement is necessary to keep the discussion within reasonable lines.
