

WHAT'S THE USE OF HAVING CITY EDITORS ANYWAY, SHE ASKS?

They are Always in the Way When News is Wanted. It's Great to Have a Grouch

By SALLY JACOBS
It should have been a dark and stormy night only it wasn't.
It was one of those heavenly lovely September evenings and everyone was out, especially the men, to get the election returns.

Naturally they chose to be where they would get the most authentic reports. The Republican office of course. The other reason for their coming was the genial city editor, who, no matter how busy, is always courteous. Foolish, foolish men. You can't always be happy, by heck, specially when returns are coming by long and short distance phones, telegraph and tramp service, not by a long shot.

of all, the wiping out of twenty-one precious human lives—the lives of loyal and brave non-union workmen who manfully stood fast to their posts during the perilous hours of death and destruction.

The publisher insisted that he did not object to labor organizing but he was opposed to a closed shop.
Scott took exception to Mr. Otis' reference to his plant as an "open shop" and also his statement that the wages paid the typewriters were above union scale.

GREAT BATTLE

Infantry charged, as at Charleroi, against machine guns, and in spite of strong positions, broke the enemy's line. The retreat of the Germans was precipitated. They seemed to lack ammunition.

Twenty-eight Prussian prisoners, the first to be seen in Paris in the present war, arrived at St. Lazare station. They had become separated from their regiment and lost their way. They asked a peasant near Meux if the Germans had taken Paris and how to get there. The peasant replied he thought that Paris had fallen and would conduct them to the right road. When too late, the Prussians found he was leading them into the British lines.

MEDIATION NOT SOUGHT

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—Secretary Ryan said after a cabinet meeting that no intimation had been received from any belligerent country suggesting the likelihood of the acceptance of the president's offer of mediation at this time. He denied that Germany had indicated a desire for peace.

Some Incidents
A number of funny incidents are coming to light in connection with the election yesterday. It is said that at one polling place a gentleman who has been and is particularly opposed to woman suffrage approached a lady officer of the election and asked for a ballot. The lady who was not attending conversant with the duties of the office, picked up a democratic ballot and handed it to him with the exclamation, "Don't you want one of these ballots, they are the popular ones today?"

Of course, the gentleman proceeded to inform the lady that he had already made up his mind and that he would prefer to have the ballot that he had spoken for when he first came in.

Republican Bulletin
Throughout the city there was tremendous interest in the returns and early in the evening the crowds began to gather at the various places where news might be received, anxious for the first news from the several polling places. Throughout the evening Republican Bulletins, containing the latest possible accurate news were read from the stages of the many theaters, flashed on the bi. screen down at Riverside park and posted and read before public gatherings in all parts of the city.

Owing to the long and complicated ballot and the many candidates to be voted for, returns were very slow in coming in, and at midnight the detailed count was only beginning to be known. All through the evening there were rumors and counter rumors. According to one Ling had it cinched and to another there was nothing to it but Smith, while the few returns received indicated a very even fight throughout the state, and so on down the list. From the beginning it was evident that Adams would poll a tremendous vote and receive the nomination and also that Callaghan would poll a big vote and probably win while the race for governor pointed strongly to Hunt from the very earliest returns. Lyman was running well and Clark surprised everybody by the big vote he was polling for superior judge.

Reports were received at the Republican office by direct wire, telephone and messenger, while automobiles were pressed into service to hurry in the tardy reports from outlying districts. Throughout the evening the office was thronged with anxious inquirers, interested friends of the candidates, curious passersby and many of the candidates themselves. Bulletins and reports were tabulated and all were supplied with the latest news hot from the wires.

SMITH DEFEATS LING
The following returns: For senator, Smith 23, Ling 15; Judges of the supreme court, Cunningham 22, Hawkins 22, Ross 22, Franklin; for governor, Hughes 21, Hunt 19, Callaghan, 12; Orme, 21; Case, 25; Robertson, 12; Bolin, 18; Hanson, 12; Babbitt, 26; Bradner, 11; Cole, 13; Geary, 19; Jones, 17; Weatherford, 5; the supreme court with the other candidates who had been proposed was accomplished without a contest as was the nomination by the republicans of Lorenzo Hubbell for the United States senate, Ralph Cameron for governor, and the other republicans on the ticket. The progressive and republican primaries were "quite perfunctory."

In some counties not more than fifty per cent of the registered vote was brought out at the primaries and in few counties was as much as sixty per cent of it brought out, so that a great unknown hung this and the time of the general election. In Maricopa county there was a fair attendance of women voters at the primary.

At midnight it was plain from the meager returns drifting in from a half dozen counties that Smith had been re-nominated by a large majority and that by a smaller margin Governor Hunt had defeated Dr. Hughes. Early returns had given the latter surprising leads in small precincts in Yavapai and Cochise counties from one or two small precincts in this county seemed to bear out the forecast that Hughes would lead Hunt in the rural precincts by sufficiently large majorities to wipe out an expected heavy Hunt vote in town. But later, the returns from the south side as well as those from the west end where the Hughes sentiment was believed to be particularly strong, showed slight Hunt majorities. Meanwhile as the count proceeded in the city precincts his lead increased. Later returns from the outside meager as they were were sufficiently indicative to leave no doubt of his re-nomination by a substantial majority.

The meager returns indicated that Callaghan had developed greater strength in various parts of the state than had been expected. Also he was receiving a heavier vote in this, Orme's home county than had been counted upon. The vote of the latter seemed to bear no relation to the so-called administration vote as had been predicted and the probabilities then were that Callaghan would be re-nominated. Though none of the larger precincts had sent in complete or nearly complete returns, it seemed evident that all the present members of the supreme court had pulled through and that all the members of the corporation commission had been re-nominated with the exception of Cole. Bradner's nomination was assured. These were all the contests among the democrats.

The count everywhere was provokingly slow on account of the extreme length of the ballot. Communication was lost with many points by the closing of the telegraph offices when only a small part of the vote had been counted and word was received from others that the count would not be completed before this morning. In some of the larger precincts it was expected that it would be noon before the completion of the count.

The Republican and progressive vote everywhere was light and from many points was not reported at all. It was apparent that these parties having no contests of their own to settle had shut up shop to assist their friends, the democrats in the settlement of their domestic troubles.
