BACKBONE OF ARMY.
Noncommissioned Officers the Glorified Sinews of War.

With Unlimited Ability to Work, They Bear the Brunt of Battle and Shoot Their Way into the Corridors of Oblivion.

The recruit of the army no soldier wants that he will obey the commands of all officers placed above him than he falls into the hands of a sergeant. This soldier, with the two men under his charge on his march, looks him over, guides him to a latrine place and begins to lick him into shape.
He begins by teaching him how to stand, how to turn around, where to keep his eyes and all the small details of the soldier's business. He impresses on him the necessity of quick doing, and cautions that the officers are there to think. Then the recruit is shuffled on to a sergeant, who places him in a set of fours and teaches him how to find his place and what to do when he finds it. He finally falls into the hands of the first sergeant in company drill.
He may get an occasional sight of his captain, but he learns to know and emulate his sergeant.

The "noncom." is the teacher. His unlimited ability to work and his undying patience straighten up round shoulders, live up shuffling steps and make a sturdy soldier of the raw recruit.
He works always and forever, and executes the orders of his superiors quickly and accurately. He serves as a model to be copied after by the private—he is the backbone of the army.

Glory seldom comes to the "non-com." A long time ago a certain Sergt.
Jasper won a permanent place in history, and more recently Sergt. Hamilton Fish died bravely at the front.
The "noncom." works unnoticed, like the line player in the football team, because he doesn't run with the ball, but he is the backbone that holds the ribs together. When the battle is hot and sweat mingles with blood on the sodden field, when bullets whizz and shells scream, when comrades sink to the ground and turn on their faces, the officer lifts his sword on high and steps forward into glory. The "noncom." springs the quiet "steady boys!" and wipes away the foam of death, shooting his way into the corridors of oblivion.
The captain knows he will be famous if he survives—famous if he dies. The sergeant or the corporal knows his wife and children will weep over their loss, his comrades that survive him will bury him in a soldier's grave wrapped in his blanket. He is too numerous for the historian to mention; he was simply doing his duty. Yet if the victory is won it is because he is in his place and doing his duty.

Under the new tactics in use by the United States army companies no longer fight with men shoulder to shoulder under the direct command of the captain. Much stress is laid on the skirmish drill, in which sets of four under corporals and squads under sergeants fight in open order, firing at will after the captain has ordered "cease firing." The corporal is responsible for his set of four and the sergeant for his squad.
The first sergeant is in a manner responsible for the entire company and is ready to assume command when his officers are shot down. The new arrangement gives opportunity to the "noncom." to show himself. It remains to be seen whether or not he will break into fame.

It is not in battle, however, that the noncommissioned officer earns the title of "backbone," for in the fight the sweating private is a necessary person. In the camp the white-chevoned soldier makes his presence known and felt. The first sergeant, gruff, stern, severe, kind, man of all work and all intelligence, father of his company and mother, too, in camp, is in charge of his men. He looks after the company quarters, tents, bedding, clothing, knows all about the kitchens and sees to the equipment. He calls the roll, details the guard, knows the abilities and willingness of every soldier of his command and is the disciplinarian and mouthpiece of his company. He is the go-between for privates and officers, adjusts quarrels and disseminates advice. The company books, though not intricate, are tedious, and are kept by him, and he reports the dead to his captain. He seems to be in every place at the same time. He is the model soldier.

The literature of the present war is yet unwritten. Glorious victories have been won and admirals and generals have been launched into everlasting fame. It is to be hoped, when the war correspondents get back to the quiet of their desks, they will not have been blinded by the glare of uplifted swords and glittering shoulder straps to the bravery and courage of the "noncommissioned man." There is a room in history for the "backbone of the army."—Kansas City Star.

MOTHER OF FITZHUGH LEE.
She Was Once a Washington Belle and is Still the Idol of Her Illustrious Family.

Blind and almost helpless as a baby, the mother of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee lives with her son Daniel, near Fredericksburg, Va. Though nearly 90 years old, she is still bright and cheerful. Surrounded by descendants who fairly idolize her, she is rapidly nearing the dark river, fearless and with childlike confidence. Her grandfather, George Mason, was a prominent statesman in the early days of the republic and took part in framing the American constitution.
His third son, John, inherited considerable property in Virginia, including An-alostan Island, to which place he brought a lovely Maryland bride, whose family name was Munay. The youngest child of this couple was Anna Maria, who was brought up on the outskirts of Washington. In her youth she was known as "beautiful Nannie Mason of the island." At Arlington she first met Lieut. Sydney Smith Lee, United States navy, a brother of Robert E. This meeting resulted in courtship and marriage, Gen. Joseph E. Johnston being one of the groomsmen. Portraits taken in those early days show the bride to have had a lovely, piquant face, with rosy cheeks, brown eyes and clustering brown curls.

The young couple resided for some time in Washington, where Mrs. Lee's beauty, wit and vivacity made her the admiration and center of a choice social circle. At their country home, Chestnut, near Alexandria, on the 19th of November, 1833, their first son was born, and named Fitzhugh, after a beloved friend, Mrs. Fitzhugh, of Raven-worth. Five other sons were born to them, and all grew to manhood and were gallant sailors and soldiers during the civil war. When that struggle commenced Capt. Lee resigned from the navy, and, like his famous brother, offered his sword to his native state. Mrs.
Lee went with him to Richmond, leaving all her property in the hands of the enemy. Never throughout these four years of horror and carnage did Mrs.
Lee's courage give way, though her husband, sons and many relatives were at the front. At the close of hostilities she returned with her family to a country place in Stafford county, Va., where her husband died soon after. Mrs. Lee spent many years in the quiet dignity of widowhood at old Richmond, on the Potomac. When her son, Fitzhugh, became governor of Virginia she made her home with him in Richmond, and once more became a charm in society. She was ever keenly interested in the political issues of the day, but unfortunately a severe cold settled on her eyes. After intense suffering, borne with her usual fortitude, she submitted to a painful operation, which, however, failed to give relief, and she became totally blind.

The Philippine Islands.
The Encyclopedia Britannica places the number of the Philippine islands at "more than fourteen hundred." Other authorities say about "two thousand." Under medieval Spanish rule the archipelago had not only not been surveyed, but its islands have not even been counted. One of the first effects of American intrusion there is the sending of Prof. George F. Becker thither to make a complete survey of the group on behalf of our government.

Cream of Carrot Soup.
Grate three good-sized carrots; cover them with a pint of hot water; add a slice of onion, a bay leaf and two cloves; cover and cook slowly for one hour. Rub together two table-spoonsful of butter and three of flour; add to the carrot mixture a quart of milk, stir in the thickening and stir carefully until the boiling point is reached and press through a sieve.
Season with a teaspoonful and a half of salt and a quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper.—Ladies' Home Journal.

New Friends.
The disinterested readiness of the Spaniards in Santiago to shake hands with the Americans possibly reminds Mr. Fitzsimmons of the surprise he experienced in finding how many new friends he had when he stepped out of the ring at Carson carrying Mr. Corbett's scarlet peltus with him.—N. Y.
