

TOMBSTONE WEEKLY EPITAPH.

VOL. IV. NO. 13.

TOMBSTONE, COCHISE COUNTY, ARIZONA, OCTOBER 7, 1882.

FIVE DOLLARS A YEAR

WAS IT MURDER?

The Body of a Dead Man Found on the Public Highway.

Mr. E. M. Benson, of the O. K. Corral on Allen street, arrived in town last Saturday on Soldiers' Holes, and brought intelligence of finding the dead body of a man about five miles east of that place, the particulars of which are about as follows: While returning from the Chiricahua mountains, whither he had been on business, he came upon the camp of an acquaintance, Captain Jack Shearer, who insisted that he should join him in a cup of tea, to which Mr. Benson consented. While partaking of supper, Mr. Shearer, who has several on the road freighting lumber, stated that he would have to go back about two miles and drive in a couple of his teams, as he had found them deserted by their drivers, Indian Joe and a man by the name of Thomas. Mr. S. remarked that they had a bottle of whiskey with them, but did not think it a sufficient quantity to intoxicate them. One of the men in the camp stated that he had heard three gunshots, but as there did not appear to be any ill-feeling between Joe and Thomas, this information did not appear to create any suspicion. After Mr. Benson had rested himself and team, he drove on towards Soldiers' Holes, at which place he was to stop for the night. When a few miles from the camp he discovered a man lying in the middle of the road, with his hands folded across his face as though asleep. He supposed he was merely sleeping, and got out and attempted to awaken him. He shook him several times but received no response, and he struck a match, which revealed to Mr. B. the lifeless form of Thomas. He raised his head and found that the back of his neck was still warm, giving evidence of his having died but a short while previous. Mr. Benson could do naught but drive on to the ranch, where he arrived about 10 o'clock that evening, and stopped until 3 o'clock in the morning, when he started for this city, arriving here about 9 o'clock, a. m. Mr. Ritter, the undertaker, upon learning of the facts, undertook Mr. U. Hank, the expressman, to ring the body. Since receiving this intelligence, which was currently rumored on the street, that Thomas was not murdered, but fell from the wagon, the wheels passing over his neck, causing his death as above stated. The mystery involved in the case is the non-appearance of Indian Joe, and as Sheriff Behan had received no intelligence of the matter up to a late hour last night, there has been no effort made to arrive at the true inwardness of the case. The expressman will arrive with the body about 10 o'clock this morning, when an inquest will be held, when it is expected more light will be brought to bear on the case.

ARREST OF PETE SPENCE.

Charged with Cattle Stealing and Violating the Revenue Law.

Frank Gray and Billy Wilson arrived in town Saturday morning and surrendered to Sheriff Behan. The prisoners were arraigned before Judge Wallace at 10 o'clock. M. A. Smith appeared for the prisoners and District Attorney Price and Webster Street for the defense. On motion of the prosecution, the case was continued until 10 o'clock Monday, the prisoners being allowed to depart on their own recognizance. In conversation with an EPITAPH reporter, Spence stated that he was the victim of persecution on the part of Judge Burnett of Charleston. He said that he bought and paid for every head of the cattle in question and that Burnett was trying to rot him out of the country in order to avoid paying him $250, which was due to him on a business transaction for several months past. Spence threatened to commence legal proceedings against Burnett, as soon as the present matter was disposed of. Later in the day a complaint was filed with United States Commissioner Dred by Judge Burnett, charging Spence with violating the revenue laws, by driving cattle into the country without paying duty. The commissioner placed a warrant in the hands of Deputy Marshall Blackburn for the arrest of Spence, Hovey and Grey. The marshal went to Charleston, and from there to Spence's ranch, but did not find the object of his search. Returning to Charleston he learned that Spence and Hovey had just started for this city. He returned also and arrested Spence and Hovey soon after reaching town. They were arraigned before the commissioner, and an examination set for Monday morning. The prisoners were remanded to the custody of the marshal.

A Denial.

The following card reached this office last night from Mr. J. F. Duncan, of Bisbee, one of the Democratic nominees for representative to the legislature. We must confess entire ignorance of such a combination as Mr. Duncan suggests, and believe that he must be mistaken as to the facts. However, his prompt and vigorous refusal to be a party to such an arrangement if it exists both creditable to his honor, and partly fealty. We trust Mr. Duncan is mistaken, but give his card for the perusal of the public.

A Card.

TO THE VOTERS OF THE COUNTY OF COCHISE, A. T. It having been represented to me that a combination had been formed, or was being formed, for the purpose of electing one Democrat and two Republican candidates to the territorial legislature, I wish it distinctly understood that I will not sanction the use of my name in a political clique or combination, for such purpose, relying on the people alone. If they elect me to represent them I will do it to my utmost ability. Very respectfully,
J. F. DUNCAN.

Bisbee, September 29, 1882.

What has become of the Republican candidate for treasurer? Nobody ever hears him spoken of.

IVES WILL WEAR THE HAT.

Firemen's Election—Wm. Ives Elected Chief Engineer.

At an early hour Tuesday morning groups of men congregated at the Senate saloon and vicinity, and were actively engaged in working for their respective choice for chief engineer. Wm. Ives, of course, the central figure around which all the smaller fry gathered, and who listened with deepest interest to the words of political wisdom which flow so freely from his lips when engaged in "whooping up" the merits of those whom he would like to see advanced in political life. Ever and anon his gaze would wander to the immaculate cocktail architect, who with arms placed akimbo on the polished walnut bar, waited patiently until some one would turn to the sly glances of the "boss" and set them up. After partaking of the cup that cheers, some other luckless wight would come in sight, and if unfortunate enough to belong to either company would have to pass through the ordeal of being button-holed by the connoisseur. About one o'clock, the polls, which were located at the city recorder's office on Fourth street, opened, and were in charge of Howard Lee, who represented the Hooks, and L. F. Blackburn whose vigilant eye was ever ready to catch on to any attempt to stuff the ballot box, or rope in an opposition vote. Thomas Hammill and Billy Soule were tellers. The voting progressed rather slowly and it was a difficult matter to determine who would have the honor of wearing the badge of office for the ensuing term. At 9 o'clock the votes being all counted, it was found that of the 158 votes cast, Moriarty had received 71 and Ives 87, thus electing Ives by a majority of 16. The friends of Moriarty claim that the voting of many was illegal, on the ground that the constitution and by-laws of the department distinctly state that no member shall be allowed to vote until they have been a member of the department for thirty days, and that several men who have only been admitted within twenty-five days were allowed to vote.

On the announcement of the result of the election, the friends of Ives made the air sound with their hurrahs, and in a short time had the hook and ladder, manned by about 30 members gallily traveling up Allen street to Campbell & Hatch's saloon where congratulations were tendered to the victor, in toasting glasses of Roderer. The Tombstone band shortly after tendered the chief a serenade, and thus ended pleasantly the second election for chief engineer of the Tombstone fire department.

The following protest was filed by Mr. Moriarty last evening. It is understood the matter will be brought before the county court in a few days:

A CARD.

TOMBSTONE, Oct. 2, 1882.
To L. F. Blackburn and Howard Lee inspectors of election for chief engineer: I hereby enter my protest against giving W. J. Ives a certificate of election as chief engineer of the Tombstone Fire Department. My protest is made on the ground that the Hook and Ladder Co. have on their roll but twenty-seven members entitled to vote at an election for chief engineer, and that at the election just passed a majority of votes were polled by that company. I claim the office of chief engineer of the Tombstone Fire Department on these grounds:
The Engine company polled seventy-five votes and with the twenty-seven votes of the Hook and Ladder company would make a total of 102 votes, of which I received 71, a clear majority of 40 votes.
D. A. MORIARTY.

P. J. Bolan for Joint Councilman.

Judge Berry and Colonel Mike Gray, a committee appointed by the Democratic County Central Committee, returned from Tevison Sunday, where they were met by a committee from Graham, consisting of P. J. Bolan, George Stevens and T. Houston. The object of the meeting was to determine on a nominee for joint councilman for Cochise and Graham counties. After a lengthy consultation it was decided that the honor be conferred on P. J. Bolan. In accepting the nomination, Mr. Bolan handed a written pledge to the Cochise delegates promising, in the event of any attempt at changing the boundary lines at present existing between Cochise and Graham, in the legislature, that, if elected, he would oppose to the best of his ability any such proposition.

Mr. Bolan is at present district attorney of the Hook and Ladder Co. He is a pronounced Democrat, and has considerable legislative experience heretofore. He is a very popular man in Graham county, and will be elected by a large majority.

Haggarty for Constable.

Elsewhere in this issue of the EPITAPH will be found the card of Hugh Haggarty announcing himself as an independent candidate for Constable. Mr. Haggarty has been a Constable in this precinct for the past two years and has been a good and faithful officer. He has been a life-long Republican but received such infamous treatment at the late packed convention of his party, that he has concluded to jump party lines and appeal to the people independently. Mr. Haggarty being well known to every person in the city, will give the Republican candidates a tough deal.

To the Voters of Tombstone.

Having served in the office of Constable of township No. 1, for the two years last past and having given such satisfaction to the people doing business with me in that office that many ask me to still further serve for another term. I hereby, announce myself as an independent candidate for Constable of said township and desire the votes of my friends for re-election on Nov. 7.
HUGH HAGGARTY.

Larkin W. Carr is an honest man, therefore the people will support him.

MARAUDING REDSKINS.

A Band of Apaches Raiding Through the San Jose Mountains—Two Men Killed.

From Mr. Brian O'Leary who returned Monday from the custom house on the San Pedro, we learn that the band of renegade Apaches, who have carried death and destruction with overwhelming fury into the heart of Sonora, were again marauding the country in the vicinity of the San Jose mountains, and were running off stock, and killing all whom they came in contact with. Last Sunday a band of forty-three Apache bucks raided the Teranate ranch, situated about 15 miles from the custom house. At the time of the attack there were five men on the ranch. The Indians succeeded in running off a large number of cattle and horses, of which number they killed fifteen. In attempting to save the stock,

TWO MEXICAN HERDERS.

Felipe Carmines and Juan Baptista, were ruthlessly slaughtered. The remaining three men after having a desperate running fight succeeded in effecting a lodgement in a secure retreat. The band, after unsuccessfully attacking their stronghold, and knowing that at least some of them would bite the dust, if the attack was kept up, gave up the contest, and took a broad trail leading into the San Jose mountains where they are now supposed to be. Most of the renegades are attired in the fatigue uniform of the United States army, and are equipped with Springfield rifles, cartridge belts, etc., and are well mounted. Mexican troops were in the vicinity of Bacuachi several days ago, and are now are probably of the red devils, and it is to be hoped that in case of a fight that it will end in their complete extermination. It is more than probable that in the event of being closely pressed, the renegades will take a passage into this territory. Gen. Crook is now in San Carlos, and is in a very fair way to gain an insight into the barbarous methods pursued by the government pets, when on a marauding expedition, and will doubtless inaugurate a line of action which will not only end the frequent incursions of these devilish pests, but will place capitalists and prospectors on a more secure footing than they have heretofore enjoyed.

IN CLOSE PURSUIT.

Since writing the above, a gentleman named Roderer brought information to town that six Mexican custom house guards were killed near the San Pedro Sunday evening. The report could not be authenticated, and its truth can not be vouched for.

A Rascally Indian Agent.

While the Indians, as a race, are deserving of very little sympathy from the people of Arizona, there are times when they are so mistreated and robbed by those placed in power over them by the government, that patience ceases to be a virtue, and the result is an emeute from the atrocious deeds of murder and rapine. The latest case is that of Roswell J. Wheeler, agent for the Pimas and Papagos, whose headquarters were located at Sacaton. Not content with robbing the government funds, he has robbed the Indians of their pitiful salaries as well. The government allowed him to employ a salaried police force, and when pay day came he invariably pocketed the amount due them. One way of raising the wind was to place an Indian under arrest for some violation of his iron-clad rules, and as a means of punishment condemn him to work in his barley field, and would reap the benefit of his labors. He also issued false vouchers, and put in fictitious accounts, but becoming emboldened by his continued success he became reckless, and was discovered by Dr. Palmer, the agency physician, who telegraphed the department. Wheeler knowing that his game was up, immediately departed for Casa Grande where he took the train. Were it not for the domestic habits of the Pimas and Papagos, who have in a measure learned to be decent to the white man, another serious outbreak would undoubtedly be the closing scene in Wheeler's career of crime.

New City Hall.

The city council have advertised for bids for the construction of a new city hall. As it is well known, the site selected is that upon which the County Recorder's office was previous to the late fire. The building is to be 30x50 two stories, with basement, and is to be built of brick, and the contract will expressly stipulate that the material used in its construction shall be of the best quality. Connected with the building will be a jail which will be appropriately fitted up and wherein every luckless individual who shall fall under the displeasure of the city's peacemakers will find a pleasant place in which to remunerate over their troubles or to analyze the liquor which is peculiarly adapted to this climate. Plans and specifications are to be found at the auditor's office, and bonds will be required in double the amount of the bid.

Coroner's Inquest.

The coroner Monday held an inquest on the body of Joseph Thomas, the teamster who was so foully murdered on Friday work, and whose body was discovered by E. M. Benson. The jury, consisting of C. D. Fitzhugh, Al French, J. L. King, J. Coghlan and A. Alexander, after hearing the testimony of E. M. Benson and Jake Shearer, in whose employ the unfortunate man was at the time of his death, found that deceased came to his death on the 29th instant, in the Sulphur Springs valley, at the hands of a person or persons unknown. On an examination of the body by Dr. Matthews, it was found that the cause of death was evidently a 45-caliber bullet, which entered the body below the breast bone and passing through the body came out near the backbone. The deceased was about 28 years of age, and his parents reside in Springfield, Mo., and are in affluent circumstances.

A Prophylactic for Impudence and Mendacity—Novati—Handles His Critic.

EDITOR EPITAPH:—As my letter of last Friday morning has been the innocent cause of subjecting your paper to numerous d-d criticisms, I can do no less than hasten to express my regret therefor, and deplore the mean and malicious journalistic spirit which discerned in that letter "a covert attack" upon our public school system. It is not the purpose of "Novati" to create enmity, but with the least paragraph of your evening contemporary. When he enters the lists he hopes to meet with a nobler adversary—with one at least who will not descend to the meanness of expressing gratuitous slander. Why did he not charge to "Novati" whom you know is no intangible myth, the imputation charged to the EPITAPH, and which you Saturday morning very properly but weakly characterized as "malicious." My characterization of it! I been in your place would have been more forcible than elegant. I am persuaded "secular education" did not do for the newspaper editor who so recklessly substituted able for fact in order to gratify the spleen tendencies of his nature. But whatever may be the quality of his morality and however good his education it is evident that neither will make him powerful enough to remain in the front of his inveterate mendacity and prophylactic to his intellect. He is a man of education indeed with, and directed by moral influences will never descend to falsehood even for subserving his own interests. Moreover the education which studiously ignores religion and laughs at deity is not the sort which builds up, sustains and guarantees the perpetuation of states and empires.

These things are well known to every well read man in America and the same could also, were they present, tell the Republican that for religion and the moral influences which ever go hand in hand with it, this Republic, in all probability will not survive the present century, the first century of its independence. It is all very well for superficial minded scribblers who practice upon the Republican, to cry "covert attack" upon the sacredness of the common schools, when no such attack was ever thought of or intended. For the sake of I have considerable respect, but even so, as a citizen and taxpayer of this commonwealth, I claim the right, as I do the justice, of pointing out their defects when I am satisfied that such defects exist. But this I have not yet done, and not for somebody equally devoid of adding. This is a noble and honorable to be tolerated within their walls shall expose these defects I would counsel the Republican to devote itself to the task of proving that the want of education and lack of the efficiency it imparts ought not to make a bar to the candidacy of political aspirants. This is a noble and honorable in politics indeed, and one that is likely to work no good to the journal or party that gives it countenance.

Of whatsoever is the EPITAPH may be guilty under its present management, it is not coarse or personal and never ignorant. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Argus-eyed but lynx-eyed as well. What it responds to is personal criticism, it does so justly and squarely in the interest of its readers and supporters. For this I commend it. When men set themselves up for political office, they ought to remember that the political press is not merely Arg