

It is quite customary for a certain class of thoughtless and superficial people to deride the power and influence of the modern newspaper.

When we consider the place that it occupies in modern industry and in modern thought; when we consider how it is scattered broadcast all over the civilized world; when we remember that one of these white messengers is dropped every day at almost every door in the civilized world; when we consider that it touches society, education, morality and religion, that it colors and shapes all these in the popular thought, and thus becomes one of the mightiest forces to guide the movements of the modern world, shall we not say that it is of immense importance for us to study carefully its nature, to know its position, to mark out its drift, to see what influence it is having on the world, and to criticize, when we may, that which it is doing?

He then condemns the newspaper as in part an evil, for that which constitutes its greatest virtue—the gathering and dissemination of news. Without that it would cease to be a newspaper.

It is its duty to gather all facts that are important to be known; to sift, arrange and simplify them, that they may be readily understood and digested, thus rendering the public a service and a benefit.

What is there that it does not touch? Is there a department or discovery in the great field of science but what it invades, and in clear, plain language explains. Is there a subject upon which the thought of man has rested, from the depths of the sea, the caverns of the earth, to the shifting clouds and beautiful stars of heaven, but what it touches upon and gives to the intelligent mind knowledge and food for reflection?

It is not beyond the range of possibility to assume that should the entire press of the continent become consolidated upon one idea and urge with all the eloquence, the sophistry, the far reaching power it embraces a radical change in our present form of government, but that it would succeed. Consider for a moment that there are enough newspapers issued in America to furnish every man woman and child with at least one copy every week in the year, that more than forty million newspapers are printed every week, and one will begin to realize what an incalculable power they would wield if united upon any one subject.

There is not a quarter on the civilized globe but the newspaper shapes and moulds public opinion. It is a channel for open debates upon all the great and vital questions which affect human life and happiness, or the destinies of nations. The minister preaches to a few hundred people on Sunday; on Monday his sermon is published and his words of hope, of cheer, of encouragement, are read and pondered upon by thousands, and the good seed falls by the roadside and in the by-paths, where the sound of his voice would never be heard.

The Republican, speaking of Oury's election, attributes it to the fact of his being an old Arizonan. Not exactly. He was elected because he ran on the democratic ticket. This is a democratic territory, and will undoubtedly, in time, become a democratic state.

THE EPITAPH was the first paper in Southern Arizona to advocate the location of the military headquarters of Arizona at Fort Huachuca. There are many reasons why this change should be made. Huachuca is more centrally located, as to the section generally raided by the Apaches than any other, thus enabling the commander to move troops to whatever quarter there may be danger, with greater speed and less expense than from any other post or fort. This advantage applies with equal force in case of trouble of any character with Mexico. In a conflict, whether with Indians or Mexicans, the border will always be the line of action, and the ability to move the troops speedily and effectively is the main object to be desired.

The Baltimore Sun describes "fungi" as a generic term applied to parasitic plants growing on and drawing their nourishment from the substance of the object they infest. They flourish best in dark, damp places, seeming to particularly dread the sunlight. They are said to be abnormally prolific and "spontaneous" during a political campaign. The "independent" fungi proposed to "catch on" to the democratic party of Cochise county, but the weather suddenly changed, the rain fell, and the thermometer had a downward tendency, in fact it was cold, and they got left.

IX referring to the loss of Pennsylvania to the republicans, the Los Angeles Herald draws the following truthful picture of the Camerons: "Time was when old Simon Cameron was the guiding genius of the Keystone State. Starting in life as a printer's devil, he steadily worked his way to great political power. It was by no means an unobstructed career. Before he attained his great prominence, no man's head was oftener dipped into the political waters than that of the old Winnebago Chief. It has always been a question as to whether Simon Cameron, at any stage of his career, could have been elected constable, by the people, in any township in Pennsylvania. He was beyond fifty years of age before he achieved any considerable political success. But, after having flopped from democrat to know-nothing, and from know-nothing to republican; having achieved great wealth by devious means, and having at last landed in the party of "great moral ideas," Simon Cameron was in his proper element. A prominent candidate for president, supported by the Pennsylvania delegation, after having bought his election to the United States Senate over generous and impetuous John W. Forney, he helped Lincoln to the presidency and landed in that gentleman's cabinet as Secretary of War. His flagrant corruption and personal favoritism compelled Lincoln, in response to a Round Robin, signed by two-thirds of the republican members of congress, to "shunt" him off to Russia, as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, from the United States, to the Czar of the Great and Little Russias. But, at his worst, Simon Cameron was a most fascinating and ingratiating man. Of a great stature, with a nose which spoke of itself a certain kind of greatness, this peculiar public man was accessible to the meanest creature, in the shape of human kind, that cumbered the earth. Whether or not he learned his splendid bonhomie while sticking type at the case, we do not know. What we do know is that there was never a time in his political career in which he would not be at great pains to be polite to a beggar. He held his slowly acquired ascendancy to a very late day. The probability is that he is now away up in the nineties, and he tried to transmit his potency to his son, Don Cameron. The effort has been simply hopeless. J. Donald Cameron, with the finest opportunities that were ever unfolded before an ambitious youth in the United States, is simply an ingrained puppy. The heir to an unlimited political influence, he is so essentially a snob that, in the few years which have intervened since old Simon tried to transmit his sceptre to his son, the callow scion of the clan Cameron, has simply wrecked the republican party. The old master hand is gone, and the republican vessel has already drifted on the rocks.

THE difference between the parties is that a democratic victory is a condemnation and a republican victory an endorsement of the river and harbor steal, of Jay Hubbell's open and unblushing use of money to buy votes, of Arthur's disgraceful meddling in New York ward politics, of Folger's fraudulent nomination, of Sam Hale's railroad and mining operations, of Don Cameron's boss rule, and of the leadership of Secor Robeson and his ape, Keifer. It ought not to be hard for decent men to decide which side to take.

We trust the Hon. P. J. Bolan will do all in his power to prevent any division of Cochise county, for the benefit of Graham. Had he not been solemnly pledged to oppose any small measure, his opponent, Joseph Tasker, would have left this county with at least four hundred majority. It is often said political pledges are made to catch votes, but we have faith in the manhood and integrity of Mr. Bolan, and feel the interests of Cochise county will not suffer at his hands.

It is somewhat amusing to read the papers since election. If it be where the republicans have elected any of their candidates, or even one, the paper claims all the credit. The same may be said of the democratic party. They are all Little Jack Horner pulling out a plum and crying, what a great boy am I. To the above there is one exception, the EPITAPH. Our work was too effective, is too widely recognized, for any comment on our part.

During the canvass for governor in Massachusetts, Senator Hoar said: "I, for one, would prefer to have every avenue of political honor and preferment closed to me forever than live in a state that preferred Benjamin F. Butler to Robert R. Bishop."

Now that the "Widow" Ben is elected, it is a safer proposition than betting on the oyster in a church fair stew, that he will not only not leave but try to get re-elected to the Senate.

THE EPITAPH publishes this morning the complete election returns of the county, with the total vote and majority of each candidate. The table has been compiled for the benefit of the public, and is a work of considerable time and expense, neither of which is spared by the EPITAPH when the interest of its readers is concerned.

If we except Iowa, Maine, Vermont, Kansas and Michigan, the north is a solid democratic north, as it was away back in 1852. With a solid north and solid south, there does not appear to be much doubt about a democratic president in the year of grace, 1884.

The press of southern Arizona seems to be pretty unanimous in favor of the removal of the capital to either Phoenix or Tucson. But wouldn't it be pretty tough on Yavapai to thus deprive her of the benefit of her gigantic census fraud?
