COPPER PRICES AND PROSPECTS

M. & E. JOURNAL SAYS NO CHANCE FOR ANY GREAT ADVANCE IN PRICE OF RED METAL.

It is expected by some who are in a good position to judge, that soon after the end of the year a sharp rise in the value of copper will take place, the reason for this view being that at about that time the output of the refineries will begin to show the curtailment at the mines in October and November.

a speedy return to the abnormal and unsafe levels of 1906? In the case of the western mines, which suffered increased labor costs, conditions have now returned to the normal by the reduction of wages, and also the reduction in the number of men, the latter naturally increasing the average efficiency.

Electrician Makes Weather to Order. Asserting--and pointing to spring flowers blooming in a field behind his laboratory as proof--that he can produce any variety of weather his desire dictates, John C. Bedient, an electrician of this city, is about to apply for a patent and to form a company to manufacture an apparatus he is concealing in the workshop here.

He calls it a weather machine, and that's as far as he will go, except to say that electricity is its basis and that it will produce warm weather, with imitation sunshine, so far as effects go; rain, and the consequent growth of flowers, plants, and grains; snow or ice, if applied near either still or running water. He is keeping the secret of the machine's construction and stands guard each night, relieved by his wife and son; to prevent the fleecing of his possession.

"Look at those flowers, behind the shop," he said today, pointing to an arbutus. "That is because the machine is inside. Its influence would bring that field into bloom if I brought it outside and turned the proper lever. Of course, it would take some time. But you're getting too curious. Wait till the patent is issued. Then I'll give you sledding in July."
