The Following is an Extract from the Standard Oil Co.'s Books.

STANDARD OIL CO.'S BOOKS

IN SOUTH AMERICA.

In South America, the Standard Oil Co. of New York, has recently published a report, giving an account of its operations in the South American countries. The report states that the company has been actively engaged in the development of the petroleum industry in South America, and has made considerable progress in the exploration and production of petroleum. The company has also made substantial investments in the construction of pipelines and other facilities for the transportation and refining of petroleum. The report further states that the company is making plans to expand its operations in South America, and is considering the construction of additional pipelines and refineries in the region. The company's efforts in South America are aimed at ensuring a steady supply of petroleum to meet the growing demand of the company's customers in the United States and Europe.

HARVARD'S CENTER IS DEAD

Harvard University's Center for the Study of International Affairs has been closed, according to a report in The New York Times. The center had been located in the University's Widener Library, and had been home to a number of scholars and researchers who had conducted research on a wide range of topics related to international affairs. The center's closure is said to be due to a lack of funding, and the university is reportedly considering options for reorganizing the center's operations.

WINE SEIZED BY CONSTABLES

A large shipment of wine, valued at $100,000, was seized by constables at the New York harbor yesterday, according to a report in The New York Times. The wine was said to have been illegally imported into the United States, and the constables were acting on a warrant issued by a federal judge. The seizure is part of a broader effort by the government to crack down on illegal alcohol imports, which are said to be a major source of revenue for criminal organizations.

NEW HAVEN CONVENTION

The New Haven Convention, held in New Haven, Connecticut, on December 21, 1899, was a significant event in the history of the city. The convention was attended by a large number of people, including prominent politicians, business leaders, and members of the local community. The convention was held in the New Haven City Hall, and was attended by President William McKinley and other dignitaries. The convention's main purpose was to discuss issues related to the city's development and growth, and to consider plans for new projects and initiatives.

THE WIND WAS THE TEMPEST-CAUZING STORM

The wind was the tempest-causing storm, and it is said to have been the most powerful windstorm that has ever struck the region. The storm was so strong that it was able to knock down trees and buildings, and caused widespread damage. The storm was said to have lasted for several hours, and was accompanied by heavy rain and lightning.

GREAT PROGRESS BY RUSSIA

The progress made by Russia in the years since the end of the Napoleonic Wars is said to have been significant. The country has made significant gains in terms of its economy, and has also made progress in terms of its military and political power. The progress made by Russia is said to have been possible due to a number of factors, including the country's access to natural resources, and its strategic location.

GREAT PROGRESS BY RUSSIA

The progress made by Russia in the years since the end of the Napoleonic Wars is said to have been significant. The country has made significant gains in terms of its economy, and has also made progress in terms of its military and political power. The progress made by Russia is said to have been possible due to a number of factors, including the country's access to natural resources, and its strategic location.