Those trapped in the building suffered considerably from heat and smoke, but remained calm until firemen led them down the stairs. They got by that route had been cut off at first by streams of water from the fire hose. The only elevator operator on duty in the building was trapped between floors when water put his machine out of operation. Firemen rescued their way to him with axes.

ONCE WEALTHY, IS POOR MAN AT 83

Despondent New Yorker Is Saved From Suicide

New York, April 15 (AP)—An 83-year-old man, who said he had once had "millions" but now was poor and tired and wanted to die, was rescued from suicide yesterday afternoon by Magistrate Moore in Manhattan court yesterday and held for special sessions for violating the Sullivan law. He is Walter Chisholm, of 1924 Stebbins avenue, the Bronx. He said he had been a member of the Consolidated Stock Exchange for forty years.

Chisholm was arrested in an undertaker's establishment at 352 East 145th street, the Bronx, by Detective Moore of the Alexander avenue station, who had been told that Chisholm intended to commit suicide. Chisholm had an ancient revolver and told the detective he wanted to buy cartridges for it.

Chisholm said he had been turned out by his wife. He asserted that Chisholm street in the Bronx was named after him. Two letters in his pockets said that when they were delivered he would be dead.

Mrs. Chisholm, who is much younger than her husband, was told of his arrest and ridiculed his assertions that he had been put out of his home and intended suicide.

His mind had been affected when he lost most of his money about two years ago, she said.

Mrs. Chisholm declared her husband was a member of a wealthy family interested with the early development of the Bronx and that he was worth more than $200,000 at one time. He had been assistant treasurer of the Consolidated Exchange, she said. She confirmed his statement that a street had been named for him, and said he and his father, a college professor, developed the section of the Bronx in which Chisholm lives.

"My husband made and lost money," Mrs. Chisholm said, "and he had lots of money left to him by his family. But he made bad investments, and two years ago the climax came and we had to change our mode of living. It is very hard for a man who had the money and position he had to accept himself in present conditions, and his losses crept on his mind so much that he had a stroke eight months ago."

The Chisholms have no children. Mrs. Chisholm said their married life had been happy. Her husband left Saturday, she said, to visit friends in Riverdale Drive.
