The attempt of the Hartford Post to figure the democratic cause by trying to stir up a feeling between union labor and the democratic party will hardly work this time. The contract for printing the official ballots is not of so much account that it is going to make men vote against their party and their consciences. Our republican friends must be getting desperate when they grasp at such trifles.

Colonel Osborn, editor of the New Haven Register, a gold democrat who seems to be ashamed to acknowledge his mistake, is getting a mighty lot of newspaper advertising at present. Mr Osborn's paper, the Register, advocates the election of Mr McKinley, while the editor of the paper, Mr. Osborn himself, denounces McKinley and says he will not vote for him. The colonel is doing the straight act in great shape. He will need to get out a search warrant to find out where he is at.

If proof were needed that the life of a private in the United States army under existing conditions is not a pleasant one, it is furnished by the annual report of the adjutant-general, just made public, which shows that there were 3,993 desertions during the last fiscal year. The large and respectable element which oppose the "army canteen" are given a slap in the face by the report, which says that the "army canteen" has grown to be an absolute necessity, and that a business of $1,015,592, with a net profit of $464,504, was done by them during the year.

The growth of the United States in population during the past ten years—nearly 21 per cent—as shown by the official figures given out this week, 76,295,220, has been entirely satisfactory. Whether the same can be said of the growth of manliness, independence and political intelligence cannot be positively stated until after the election, which will show whether a majority of the voters will vote their known convictions or will allow themselves to be driven to the polls and to the made to vote as the local bosses in the bay of the trusts shall dictate. American manhood vs serfdom is an issue as well as the republic vs the empire.

Chairman Richardson of the democratic congressional campaign committee, who has been dividing his time between the New York branch of national headquarters and Washington, returned to Washington this week. The work of the committee, both national and congressional, is done, and the result is in the hands of the voters. Mr Richardson is confident that a democratic victory is in sight and that it will include a majority of congress as well as the presidency. Said Mr Richardson: "The reports received at democratic headquarters in New York from the different state chairmen are most encouraging and full of confidence of success at the polls." Of Mr Bryan's extraordinary reception during his speaking tour of New York, Mr Richardson said: "There is not another man in the world that could create enthusiasm equal to that aroused by Bryan on his trip through New York. It was marvelous. There is nothing like it on record." How some New York republicans regard Mr Bryan since his trip to that city may be judged by these remarks, made in Washington by W. D. Pearson, a prominent member of the New York bar: "I don't believe there ever has been a presidential candidate who was so deserving of success as is Mr Bryan. I am bound by principle, as a good republican, to cast my vote against him, but I could almost cheer if I learned that he was elected. He is absolutely sincere, and just such a man as would make a good president. I think there are a good many more republicans in the Empire state who think as I do, and the republican leaders are not at all certain of carrying the state."

The people who talk about hard times and closing factories should take courage from what Banker Clews says in his weekly letter. It is possible, he says, to attach undue importance to the elections as an element affecting Wall street interests. After all, the political shake-up is little more than a transient excitement; and its chief permanent importance lies in its revelation of the national sentiment upon the larger measures of public policy. A week after the verdict, we shall have forgotten the excitements of politics for another four years and the fortunes of the nation's regular business will absorb the attention of the Stock Exchange. Fortunately, we find there little to suggest misgivings as to the national prosperity. We have revolutionized our methods of financing our industries and can only await the results of the great experiment; but we may feel assured that, if the trial fails on business principles, there will be no delay and need be no disaster in a return to old methods so far as they may prove to be better than the new. In the meantime, it seems safe to say that we are entering upon a great and permanent extension of our export trade that may be trusted to keep our industries in a healthy and prosperous condition. What is the inference to be drawn from the fact that, after three years of unprecedented increases in our exports, we find that New York alone shipped merchandise, between January 1st and October 30th amounting to $188,000,000 as against $381,400,000 for the same period of 1899? This movement is due to no special or transient conditions; it is normal. What, too, is the meaning of such testimony as the following, from Dr Vosberg-Bekow president of the German Bureau for Preparing Commercial Treaties: "After the Americans had established their supremacy as exporters of agricultural products, which export they have organized in such a masterly manner as to defy all competition, they immediately turned to exportation of industrial products, not of the finest quality, but carefully finished; and by means of wholesale production, put at so low a price that they will in a very little while conquer the world markets. Against this industrial invasion, our customs imposts will avail as little as our grain imposts have done. Very meagre chances remain for us. But the dread struggle will have to be met; the longer it is postponed the harder it will become for us. Last year we imported from the United States to the value of $97,200,000 marks and exported thereto 377,000 marks. It is my opinion that this ratio will not vary much in the future." These are the things that will govern our future finance and our trade. Wall Street has little to fear in the face of such conquests. Our investments are steadily advancing to foremost position in the bourses of the world.

A LIFE LESSON. A millionaire in New York told the writer that, when he was a boy, he let himself out by verbal contract for five years, at seven dollars and fifty cents a week, in a large dry goods store in New York. At the end of three years, this young man had developed such skill in judging goods that another concern offered him three thousand dollars a year to go abroad as its buyer. He said that he did not mention this offer to his employers, nor even suggest the breaking of his agreement to work for seven and one half dollars a week, although verbal, until his time was up. Many people would say he was very foolish not to accept the offer mentioned, but the fact was that his firm, in which he ultimately became a partner, paid him ten thousand dollars a year at the expiration of his seven-and-half-dollar contract. They saw that he was giving them many times the amount of his salary, and in the end he was the gainer. Suppose he had said to himself: "They give me only seven and a half dollars a week, I will certainly not accept a hundred dollars a week; I am not going to earn fifty dollars a week when I am getting only seven and a half!" This is what many boys would have said, and then they would have wondered why they were not advanced.—Success.

When the British skipper, Captain Edward Sycamore, came here on a visit a few months ago, he was loud in his praise of George L. Watson's latest creation, the Sybarita. Captain Sycamore had taken out the new yacht and with her, untried and untamed, beaten over and over again the German emperor's crack yacht, Meteor. The captain admitted that he had come over to "take a look around" and see the seventy-footers, and that he had been engaged by Sir Thomas Lipton, if not to sail the next challenger, at least "to do a little with the Shamrock in the Mediterranean." Nobody doubts that Captain Edward Sycamore will be the professional skipper on board Shamrock II, and second in command only to the finest amateur in Europe, the Irish yachtsman, William G. Jameson, who eight years ago sailed his own yacht, the Iverna, to a decisive victory over the Meteor. The Sybarita is a really fine boat, and has been talked about, and in a Watson-Lipton connection, that many on both sides of the Atlantic harbored a sort of half belief that in the challenge which has come at last the boat specified would be a yawl. That the Sybarita is a remarkable boat is generally admitted, and the only thing settled about her quality is whether she could not show a clean pair of heels to the old Shamrock, just as she showed them to the Meteor. Mr Watson has always been a believer in boats of the composite build, and so the construction of the Sybarita were wood and steel, but they were wonderfully light. With this combination he produced a craft in which lightness is one of the chief characteristics. From stem to taffrail the Sybarita is 135 feet long, as against the Shamrock's 129 feet 6 inches. She is 30 feet on the water line, and her beam is 23 feet, while the Meteor's was 24 feet 7 inches. The Columbia's length over all was 132 feet and her beam 23 feet 9 inches. Her bow is long and very fine, but her counter, also fine, is shorter. So long, indeed, is her bow and so fine away the lines that she looks a slim thing, which could not possibly have a beam measurement of 23 feet. But with all her fine bow and counter the Sybarita looks anything but pretty, and her degree of ugliness depends a great deal on the point of view. And it is not perhaps so much the ugliness as it is that she is peculiar.

Taking a broadside view of her she appears to have a long drawn, flat sided, shallow body, with fine ends and little sheer. Looking from the end she appears to have a bluff bow, a shallow body, with a lively turning bilge. The floor of the sides goes well below the water line, but there is practically no tumble home. Broadside on one gets the impression of a deep and square fin, while from the end there seems to be no fin above the lead at the fore. By cutting away the lead at the deck view falls to discover any floor curves, anything, in fact, more than might be found on any old tub, save that a long wedge-shaped bow presents itself and that there is a lean where, and the centering away from the point of greatest beam at the chain plates leaves an ugly bulge. And yet all this is only apparent, for once over the side one finds the lines running beautifully and not at all as they appeared from deck. The Sybarita carries even a lower and wider mainsail than did the Shamrock, and her mainmast, which looks stumpy, is stepped well forward. Her topmast is also a short affair. The mizzen is as far aft as it is possible to carry it. The main boom is built of quarter-inch steel plates, strengthened with iron gaff and spurs and struts, while the main and spinnaker boom are of wood hollowed out. The Sybarita's lead of ninety tons is cast flat-sided without a trace of a bulb, but the weight is said to be more evenly distributed throughout its forty feet of length than in any craft built in recent years.

Whether Mr Watson, in his design of the new Shamrock, will follow the lines of the Sybarita, which after all seems to be a combination of Shamrock and Columbia, following more after the Herreshoff style, he must certainly be in view of her cleverness when lifted against the Meteor, have profited by her construction, and so make a big advance on his former work with the Valkyrie. The chances must be very much more in favor of Sir Thomas Lipton's crowning his life's success by "lifting the cup."

The tin-can combine is as big as most any of them. The share capitalization is to be $50,000,000, and the combine will be allied with other steel concerns, whose aggregate capitalization will run up into the hundreds of millions. The dog-tail trust will be organized at an early day, and the small-boy trust will come later.—Hartford Times.

Horace Greeley's advice, "Go west, young man," seems to be remembered to this day. The immigration to that section is increasing every year and, this year, the immigration bureau will handle 600,000 people who will come from the European countries to make homes. As most of them are respectable, industrious and hard-working people, they will be welcomed.—Ansonia Sentinel.

When the Gould family sanctioned the investment of some fifteen of their father's millions in the purchase of a French count they made a very poor bargain. For half the amount they might have procured a nobleman with a much higher title and an assured position, and who would have been satisfied to live within the very handsome income of his American wife. We doubt if there are half a dozen French nobles with an income of $600,000, and there are not many in England. Yet this was not enough for a little fellow whose whole family would have profited by her construction, and so make a big advance on his former work with the Valkyrie. The chances must be very much more in favor of Sir Thomas Lipton's crowning his life's success by "lifting the cup."
