

"Haven't Room On Our Floor For a China Closet."

How many times we have heard that statement. To meet that want we have added a number of styles of China Closets or Cabinets to hang on the wall. Go nicely over a register, radiator or couch. Makes a place for a few choice pieces, or for a curio cabinet. Finish is just as good as the larger ones, but they do not cost as much. Will you look at them?

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1900.

Colonel Callahan's resignation seems destined to kick up the biggest rumpus that has yet visited the Connecticut National Guard, and it is a well known fact that its troubles have not been few and far between. The general opinion seems to be that the colonel wasn't treated with the respect and leniency that twenty-eight years of service in the militia would seem to entitle him to.

There is considerable gossip in Washington concerning the candidacy for the senate, from Nebraska, of Assistant Secretary Melklejohn. He spent the greater part of the campaign on the stump instead of in the war department, and now he is likely to spend more time in Nebraska than in Washington, until the senators are elected, while his salary goes right along. In addition to being allowed to neglect his official duties, Mr Melklejohn wants the administration to back his candidacy for the senate. If Mr McKinley does that, Nebraskans in Washington say he will raise the biggest sort of a row among republicans of the state.

As a sample of the current drift of the exports, says Henry Clews in his weekly letter, the exports of cotton for the month of October show an increase of $32,000,000 over those of the same month of 1899; and to that must be added the extraordinary shipments of securities to London and Germany within the last two weeks. Such a state of things may be expected to soon develop a situation that will compel either a large return of securities, or considerable European shipments of gold, or large lendings by New York to London and Berlin to bridge over the emergency. It is perhaps not likely that New York will apply any pressure to bring gold to this side the Atlantic. The time for the return of money from the interior is close at hand, and New York may be expected to easily take care of the demand for loans; and it would clearly serve the purpose of our banks to allow a considerable balance to remain on demand in Europe rather than to force settlements in gold, with the effect of producing a local redundancy of money and thereby forcing down the rate of interest. In any event, the situation, present and prospective, may be expected to favor ease in the New York money market from this time forward for six months; the boom therefore is likely to be felt free to disport itself for a considerable time without interposition.

And now there is talk of reorganizing the republican party. Here is what Senator Pettigrew of South Dakota has to say on the subject: "I predict the formation of a new party, based on the protests of the outraged people against republicanism as taught by Mark Hanna. For weeks I have told the national committee we were defeated in South Dakota, but they have kept claiming the state and I have been working for political effect. Of course, I will be in the new party. What it will be called is of little moment. It may be 'social labor' or it may be the new democracy. It will be made up of persons discontented with the elements in politics, as a protest against the existing conditions and the present tendency of things. The movement will grow rapidly, and I believe will defeat the republican party in 1904. The Mark Hanna republicanism menaces the republic. The concentration of wealth will create an influence soon to restrict the right of suffrage until capitalists will say no one is fit to take part in the government who does not know enough to make money. At first the limits will include a small majority, and then the amount will be raised until there is nominally a Simon-pure illiteracy. There will likely occur a divorcement of the democratic and populist parties, but the new party will be the popular one. I cannot say whether Mr Bryan will affiliate with it or not."

Now that McKinley and his administration have been indorsed by the re-election of the party candidates for another four years the men at the helm have begun to show their teeth. Recent dispatches announce that it is the intention of President McKinley and Secretary Hay to employ all the influence the administration can bring to bear on the senate in the interest of the Hay-Panuncote treaty in the expectation that it will be ratified at the earliest possible moment. The treaty, says an exchange, bearing the names of our pro-British secretary of state and of the British ambassador is so important an abandonment of American rights that it practically amounts to an act of treason against the United States. Let us see what it is this man John Hay surrenders in the interest of England. The Hay-Panuncote convention of February 8, 1900, guaranteed the neutrality of any canal that may be constructed to connect the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific. In other words, Great Britain or any other European power under the agreement would be in a position to forbid the United States the use of the Nicaragua canal in time of war if the American government desired to send through this American waterway an American fleet to protect our Pacific coast from a hostile attack. McKinley and Hay have agreed to the proposition that this country shall build and pay for the canal and that when that is done it shall not be permitted to fortify it or exercise any more control over it than if it had not spent a dollar on it. Will an American senate dare ratify such a treaty? Hanna announces that it will. The man of the dollar mark believes that the administration which he bosses is strong enough to set American opinion at defiance in this as in other matters. If two-thirds of the senate obey the cracks of the Hanna whip the Hay-Panuncote treaty will be ratified. Let us hope for the sake of the country that the United States senate has not sunk so low as to become a party to the act of treason embodied in the Hay-Panuncote treaty.

HEARD IN PASSING Taxation will have to be increased. Instead of decreased, if several reefs are not taken in various republican schemes for congressional appropriations. New York asks that it be excused from wincing the cheap vice of the dives while it worships at the shrine of the more exclusive vice of the horse show. New republican members of the house will not get much pap, as it seems to be generally understood that the organization of the present house will be practically continued in the next. The first uncensored cablegram from Manila says the Filipinos are recruiting for an active campaign, although they know of Mr McKinley's re-election. How do the republicans account for this? If the republicans put out that talk about reducing the congressional representation of the south as a "feeler," they must be thoroughly convinced by this time of the dangerous nature of such an undertaking. Lincoln's life-size portrait in the white house fell, face down the other day. Of course, the fall was an accident, but if Lincoln were alive he would find much going on that would cause him to kick his face.

Alas, poor Charley! He did at the top first, and the general end came last night. Like Yorick, he was a fellow of infinite jest and most excellent fancy.—Hartford Post. The ways and means committee of congress are beginning to figure on how they can reduce the war taxes. That they should be reduced in times of peace seems to be self evident. In their examination we trust they will not overlook the check stamp tax. That seems to be ripe for plucking.—New Britain Herald. A St. Petersburg dispatch says that death at this time would be particularly bitter to Emperor Nicholas, because he is again hoping for the birth of a son within a few months. It is an open secret that the Czarovitch, Grand Duke Michael, now about 22 years old, is not a favorite of the emperor, who is known to desire to leave his son as heir to the throne.—Hartford Times.

BREATHING EXERCISES. If during the coming winter the observant pedestrian should notice innumerable excited people striding through the streets with a sallow complexion and between their elbows, he must not jump at the conclusion that London has suddenly lost its senses. For this form of exercise is part of a treatment which is now rapidly becoming popular—the cure for asthmatic bronchitis and all the other pulmonary diseases which trouble and distress dwellers in our foggy, smoke-laden cities. Heretofore the asthmatic person has kept in doors as much as possible, carefully shutting the doors and doors and keeping a roaring fire blazing in the grate. Now he is bidden to fling his windows open, and, moreover, to keep in the open air as much as possible. But this is not all. He is taught that it is not so important what he breathes as how he breathes. Breathing exercises, then, are part of the cure, and here not only the sufferer from bronchial catarrh is concerned, but even the woman of fashion anxious to maintain her good looks. For fifteen minutes, twice a day, women of fashion, asthmatic patients, and indeed all the world, are bidden to stand out of doors, preferably in the sunshine, and holding the chest up, to inhale slowly through the nose and then as quickly exhale the breath through the mouth. Of course, every one knows that it is through the nose that one inhales, and it is quite probable that many of humanity's illnesses are due to improper breathing, but at the same time it will be an almost superhuman feat to make mankind breathe through the nostrils.—London Globe.

BEARS OF ST. JOSEPH'S PARISH. Two bears were killed last night at 2485 Notre Dame street, by A. St Onge, a butcher. The animals were formerly owned by the Rev. Father Leclerc, late cure of St. Joseph's parish. He had taken care of them for three years and made pets of them. When the priest died, however, the bears, unaccustomed to strangers, were always in a cross mood. Their appetites were almost insatiable, and as the burden of feeding them fell on the parish, a council of the leaders of the herd, when it was decided to sell them. Mr St Onge was the purchaser, and last night he shot them.—Montreal Herald.

THE CALVES. Once there was a rich farmer who was never grateful for any blessings. His pastor told him during a visit one day that he was very rich, and congratulated him on the splendid wealth. "Oh, I don't know about that," was the silky rejoinder. "Why, man, look at the crops," exclaimed the preacher, pointing to the country lying down splendidly all over the farm. "Why, what fault can you find?" "Well," growled the misanthrope, "there won't be no soiled hay for the calves to eat."—Louisville Times.

FRESHMAN HUNTINGTON.

He is the son of H. E. Huntington, who is managing the Pacific railroads left by Collis P. Huntington, and a grandson of Soloh, brother of Collis P. He is heir to the Huntington millions.

He is 24 years of age; yet a freshman. For six years he has worked in California as a surveyor. He went to work as a boy, worked up by merit to chain boy and then moved on. His advance was by hard, consistent work. His father and grandfather shared Collis P. Huntington's views in college days, and they felt it a menace to a young man. They wanted a young man to pick his occupation and work up. Huntington did that until he felt the need of higher study in his line. For that he came to Harvard's scientific school, and has been doing hard work. He does not live in any of Harvard's aristocratic halls—Claverly, Beck, Dunster, Randolph, Ware or any building where sons of millionaires live. He says: "These men are inclined to waste time. I am here for work. That is why I am living in Walter Hastings hall."

Hastings hall is the best dormitory the college owns. It is comfortable and homelike, but not elaborate like the above named. Here Huntington has settled down. He is used to hard work, used to simple minded working men and used to living comfortably, but not luxuriously. He has modeled his life along these lines. He boards at Randall hall, where all of the poor men eat. This hall is run on a plan so that a man pays for what he eats, and one can live for $2 a week. Huntington lives here, but on more money, of course. It is a plain, simple place, where he meets plain, working, practical men, and he likes it. His room has been furnished modestly. He purchases comfortable chairs, useful desks and tables, and a good bookcase. Then he ordered a hundred books. He didn't order books as Harvard men order them; nor pretty sets, in neat and costly bindings. He got books on surveying, books he needs and books he wants to read. And he got books for lighter reading, of good selection. He is plain, democratic, and never will be a "marked man," as most millionaires are at Harvard among visitors seeking "the sights."—Boston Post.

A WITTY DUKE. Although few kinder hearted men have ever lived than the eighth Duke of Beaufort, yet he detested anything in the shape of snobbishness or "class." He would raise his hat to a charwoman with the same politeness that he would to a duchess, but a pattern of good manners himself, he had no tolerance for bad ones in others, whether they were the prince or peasant. The duke on this occasion gave a lunch breakfast for those he personally invited at Badminton. A certain baker not only rode to the meet on the lawn, but coolly walked into the house and took a seat at the breakfast table. The duke, kindly as he was, could not stand such impudent conduct as this, rising from his seat, he said quietly: "When we want the buns, Mr Smith, we will send for you, thanks." And the baker beat a hasty retreat. Another of the stories told of the owner of Badminton is that on the occasion of the French horse Gladiateur winning the Derby, the duke was greatly disappointed at the failure of a horse of his own which was running in the race. A very forward Frenchman, who only knew his grace by sight, pushed through the crowd toward where he was standing and said, loudly: "The French have avenged Waterloo, duke!" The duke calmly looked down at the speaker and replied: "Yes, I am told the French ran very well at Waterloo."

LIONS AS THEY REALLY ARE. Lions infest the whole of the Beira route to this day. Then years ago when the line was being surveyed for their crawling everywhere. The usual idea of these carnivals is that they are the king of beasts; that lions pounce and lash their tails, step after step, and that they are both noble looking and noble in their habits. Never was there a greater mistake. Those who have made their close acquaintance—and they are those who pioneered for this railroad—say that a lion far more often creeps on his stomach like a snake, or than he ever looks like his heraldic counterpart. "Until one jumps at you he looks quite insignificant. But when he has made a spring within a few yards of your shoulder, he seems to fill the heavens above and the earth beneath. Again the roar of a lion is a thing to be feared, and the sound heard in the London Zoological gardens at feeding time. It is something between a cough sounding soft and close besides you; then as you listen, it swells on the air, everywhere at once, and it is impossible to locate it. It travels for miles, and has a very little else in it, the "wide" "arthy world," as an Irishman put it. The smell of a lion is also "foetid." It is a nobly overpowering odor: it is as the smell of hot dirty mice. It is a scent once met with never forgotten.

THE RAILWAY WORLD. The survey of the proposed railroad from the western coast of the Congo Free State to Lake Tanganyika, where it will form a junction with Cecil Rhodes' Cape to Cairo line, began in July, a year ago. It is estimated that the road will be 930 miles long and cost $40,000,000. An express train speeding toward Williamsport, Pa., struck a huge boulder while going 50 miles an hour about two o'clock in the morning. A slower or lighter train would probably have been wrecked, but as it was it had been loosened by recent rains and had rolled onto the rails. The boulder was only a few feet long and was only a few feet high. It was the purpose of carrying on a bridge between that part and Malmo. The vessel is built of steel, and is an ice-breaker, so that she may be able to force her way through the heavy and thick ice fields with which the channels are covered during the winter.

THE FIRST VIOLIN.

The violin is said to be the modern form of the viola da braccio, a small instrument supported on the arm. The violin made its appearance first about the year 1550 in the north of Italy. It differed from the true viol in having the back as well as the front arched, in the number of strings and in various technical points. Earlier than the viol were the troubadour's instruments, small bowed instruments known variously as geiges, crowds, rebecas and fiddles. They were rested on the shoulder and played with deeply curved bows, and were much smaller than the modern violin. Originally they were so small that they produced only shrill notes fit to accompany boys' voices; but deeper notes were used, and from them came the viol, and from the viol the violin was refined. The name fiddle, though now used humorously, is the proper English name for the violin. Century dictionary, "fiddle." The word comes from the middle Latin vitula, a fiddle, and it is found also in the Teutonic language in various forms.

NO RIGHT TO UGLINESS. The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate stomach, liver and kidneys, and to purify the blood. It gives strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin, rich complexion. It will make a good-looking, charming woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at G. L. Dexter & Co's Drug Store.

ENGLISH FACTS AND FANCIES. London consumes 11 tons of salt daily. About 400,000,000 pounds of soap is used in Great Britain yearly. The most common name for a place in England is Newton, which occurs no fewer than 72 times. A mushroom gathered on Bislej Common measured 54 inches in circumference and stood 11 inches in height, its weight being nearly four pounds. The Hebrew population of London has more than doubled during the last 20 years. It is now estimated at between 100,000 and 120,000. The finest garden hedges in England are at Hat, Barn, in Buckinghamshire. They are over 30 feet high, are immensely thick and are clipped so as to present the smooth, velvety appearance peculiar to the finest jet and box hedges.

The Day When

The Garden of Eden was started, man was naked and the temperature justified him. Later on Egypt and India were the home of a civilization which was the best of its kind. The sun was not over these ancient people and they had no use for our mode of dressing; but, in our day, we have old Sol and Jack Frost, who send out their advance agents warning us to prepare for their coming. No better preparation can you make than by getting in one of our Overcoats and Suits for men, boys and children, which we sell on easy payments.

Ladies Cloaks

We have about five dozen Capes and Jackets, in all colors, made in the newest shape, which we are selling at reduced prices.
