

Can there be anybody in this good town that doesn't know of the merger of The Connors Clothing Co. of Bridgeport and Hartford and The Connors-Halloran Co. of New Britain into a new organization known as The Connors-Halloran stores, Inc.?

And has anyone so much money that he or she can afford to be indifferent to such reductions as the Prior - to - Merger Sales offering?

OUCH! LOOKEE WHO'S GOT A SORE THROAT!

Sore Throat, No Joke to Jill, the Giraffe

One of the Eight Giraffes coming with Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey. Just think of a giraffe the next time you are afflicted with a sore throat and thank your lucky stars that you are not in his elongated class. The accompanying picture is of Jill—one of the herd of eight giraffes carried by the great Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows. John Patterson, who is boss of all the animals in the mammoth super-menagerie, is of the opinion that one of the higher air currents struck Jill when she was a bit over heated and so gave her a cold. It took a whole pall of goose-grease to cover Jill's neck and yards of cotton bandage to wrap it up. But Jill got well and will be but one of hundreds of strange sights to be seen when the circus exhibits here Saturday, June 2. After circus patrons have visited the zoological display they will pass into the mammoth "big top." Here they will witness the gigantic introductory pageant with its great companies of knights and fair ladies and gorgeously costumed groupings which tell in pantomime many of the stories made famous in fairyland and nursery lore. Following their agent will come more than a thousand arena sensations introduced by scores of performers new to America, four steel arenas filled with trained animals and an army of clowns that breaks all precedent in point of fun and numbers.

The Japs Like Him!

John Bowers was a gentleman of credit and renown. But no one ever knew it till he came to Movie-town. Where he joined the Goldwyn forces, bringing notice to his name. So he's overtaking Fortune as he climbs the road to fame!

The American motion picture fan is by no means alone in his habit of collecting photographs of screen stars. John Bowers, well known leading man in Goldwyn pictures, has just received a request for a portrait from a Japanese fan, a self-confessed "American movie actor worshipper." The letter, which Mr. Bowers is displaying proudly to everyone at the studios, reads: "May I have the pleasure of communicating to you? I am one of the most earnest American movie actor worshippers, especially of you. I went and see your's at the Denkikan, Tokokukan Cinema Theatre in movie every week. But I am very that I have none of your's photographs in my album. I hope you will be kind enough to send me you's, if you permit."

President Sees Alice on the Screen

That the President of the United States can, for the moment, forget the League of Nations, rail rate reductions, peace resolutions and cabinet meetings, and become just a movie fan, was pretty well proved during President Harding's recent visit to New York city. On the way from Washington to New York, the Alice Joyce production, "The Scarf Ring," was projected for the presidential party, which included, besides the President, Mrs. Harding, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior and other notables. The President's yacht, the "Mayflower," is perfectly equipped for projecting motion pictures, but only one projection machine is used. Consequently, the continuous projection experienced in high-class motion picture theatres is impossible. The transition from reel to reel must be broken for the usual "one minute to change reel," so familiar just a few years ago.

The Man With a Hundred Faces

A man of a hundred faces is George Fawcett, veteran of stage and screen who, with the filming of "Peter Ibbetson," in the Paramount eastern studios, adds to his long list of characterizations that of Major Duquesnois.

A lifetime of playing widely different and difficult character roles has given Fawcett a polish and versatility achieved by few actors, but he himself says his features are largely responsible for the success that accompanied his earlier efforts. Still, George Fawcett is not a handsome man.

The fact that none of his features, either eyes, nose, mouth or ears are of marked prominence, although all are well defined, makes it possible for him to step into nearly any character, except that of a young man, which his age now forbids.

He has run the gamut of character parts, portraying men of every race seen on the stage or screen. In John Robertson's "Sentimental Tommy" he was an aged and crusty Scotchman. A month later he appeared as a baron of finance, and before another month had passed he was seen as a Sicilian. But he never has done the handsome hero. His stocky build always forbade such a role, and it was one of this fine actor's secret regrets that he never was chosen for youthful lovers in his early days on the stage.

He never has been seen to better advantage than as Duquesnois, the soft-hearted old fire-eater of Du Maurier's story.

A RARE ANIMAL

Pennsylvania and Ohio movie censors cut out Romeo and Juliet because Juliet is a girl in her teens conducting herself in a most unmaidenly fashion and the play abounds in kisses and passionate love scenes. Having thus eliminated the great dramatist's art, the censors passed without question modern society dramas showing elopements, assassinations, murders and suicides. dio, in which occurs a wedding scene in a small town church.

Millarde wanted every detail of the church and the ceremony perfect. So he went to a little German Lutheran church in the Bronx and asked the Rev. Mr. Junge to come down to the Fox studio and look over the church set. Mr. Junge did so. Not only that, but he directed the players in the wedding scene, and loaned benches from his church to Millarde.

When the scene was shot, the Rev. Mr. Junge wore the biggest smile on the set.

(National Crop Improvement Service.)
AFTER you have cleaned up all you can by scrubbing, raking and whitewashing, it is a good idea to give the kitchen, cellar, pantries, cupboards, etc., a thorough dose of disinfection with a strong solution of formaldehyde. For each thousand cubic feet of space or for an ordinary cellar, use about ten ounces of formaldehyde, pouring it over five ounces of potash permanganate. You can treat sick rooms in the same manner. Seal the room and leave closed for several hours. Refrigerators, ice boxes, cupboards, sinks and all places around the kitchen and wherever there is water should be given special attention either by scrubbing with a strong solution of, say, one part of formaldehyde to five parts of water, or by spraying with an ordinary spray gun or atomizer. The same spray you use for your garden will answer every purpose.

Formaldehyde solution, when used at a proper dilution, is not at all dangerous to persons, woodwork, carpets or utensils. By all means use sun and air as much as possible.

The practice of shutting up rooms to keep them clean is not healthful. The musty smell of carpets and curtains in a closed room is due to organic decay. Many persons think that the odor in the average cellar is unavoidable. On the contrary, every cellar ought to smell sweet and clean. The foul odor generally comes from decaying wood and vegetable matter. No house can be healthful over such a cellar. Some old houses are known as disease breeders. Many people think that such houses are unlucky when they are simply unwholesome.

There is less sickness about the home and less sickness about the farm where formaldehyde is used as a disinfectant, germicide, fungicide or deodorant.
