AN ESTATE THE PUBLIC SHOULD OWN.

It is said that a Washington real estate firm is offering for sale Monticello, the famous estate of Thomas Jefferson, located near Charlottesville, Virginia. It is unpleasant to think of this property so rich in historical associations and so intimately connected with Jefferson being peddled out. It is claimed that it is being offered to a "limited and special list of those deemed both able and worthy to become the owners of such a place." While this may be true to a certain extent in most cases of the kind those are deemed "worthy" who have the price regardless of any other considerations.

After Mount Vernon there is probably no estate connected with the early presidents of the United States which it would be more unfortunate to have fall into indifferent hands to become changed, possibly cut up, and at any rate lost from a historic standpoint. Not far away is the University of Virginia which Jefferson founded and over which he watched with such interest and care during the remainder of his lifetime.

In addition to the fact that Monticello was the home of the author of the Declaration of Independence and a President of the United States it possesses a claim on the regard of the American people as an original work of art. Monticello was designed by Jefferson himself and construction work begun when he was only twenty-six years old. This was delayed by the Revolutionary War and Jefferson's long residence in Europe and it was not until 1801, the year of his first inauguration, that the mansion was completed. During the interval Jefferson had opportunities for seeing much that was architecturally fine and undoubetdly brought home many ideas which were later incorporated in his plans. While the work was in progress a European authority on architecture wrote that it was infinitely superior to all other houses in America in point of taste and convenience." Later critics have been equally ready to give praise to it from an esthetic standpoint, some even going so far as to consider it a pity that Jefferson could not have been accepted as the founder of an American style of

Several years ago Mrs. Martin W. Littleton, of New York undertook a campaign for the purchase of the old place as a national historic shrine and spent some time in Washington trying to interest Senators and Representatives in the project but while some interest was aroused there was not enough to carry the thing through successfully. The movement was renewed again last year in the form of an association which hoped to be able to raise enough money to purchase the seven hundred acres of which the estate is comprised. This effort also

It is unfortunate that matters which do not have a direct political bearing and are at least potential vote getters receive so little consideration at the hands of Senators and Congressmen. It is to be hoped that some means either private or public will be found to acquire the Jefferson property and keep it intact for the benefit of everyone as is the home of Washington. It would be a humiliating thing hard to explain to future generations and the world at large if this national heirloom with all its associations were to be allowed to go the way of ordinary real estate speculation.

they learned of the wanton destruction by the Germans of the University of Louvain. At that time the world had not begun to realize that even in this century with all its knowledge and supposed civilization it was still possible for men to return to the stone age and its barbarous indifference to all that was intellectual and cultured.

When, however, it became known that this great institution nearing its seventh century which stood for all that was highest in learning and intellectual culture; whose twentyeight colleges covered almost every known branch of learning; whose degrees were among the most cherished; and whose library was one of the most precious in existence, was a mass of ashes, a memory and nothing more, the world saw in all its ugly reality the hideous thing it had to deal with.

While America could not prevent the destruction of this old university it is a satisfaction to know that today there is being laid, by the President of an American University, the cornerstone of a new Louvain Library, designed by an American architect, and when the building is completed large American contributions will help to fill its shelves. While nothing can recall from the ashes much that gave Louvain its former pre-eminence its spirit is still intact and with a new start can continue the important work interrupted by war and look forward hopefully to more centuries of accomplishment into which the insanity of war may not enter.

Claim Japan Distrustful Of Great Britain

Tokio, July 28.—Distrust of their former ally, Great Britain, appears to be one of the results in Japan brought about by the issuance of President Harding's disarmament conference invitation.

While issued as the call of the American president to be held in the capital city of the United States, many leading Japanese criticize Great Britain, saying that Great Britain awaited the call of Harding as a solution of the Anglo-Japanese alliance renewal tangle, and teh need for retrenchment in naval building that confronted Britain.

When Joseph Deas, of Rutherford, N. J., attempted to take his two-and-one-half-year-old daughter away from her grandmother in the local railroad station yesterday afternoon, a violent argument ensued and the man was finally locked up on charges of breach of the peace.

In the City court today, Deas explained that the child had been staying with her grandmother in Bridge-port since the death of her own mother which occurred a short time ago. Deas came here yesterday to take his daughter back to Rutherford where he is employed, but his mother-in-law refused to surrender to sure the death of the paces.

Map Showing Districts For Stratford's New Government

A SIGNIFICANT CORNERSTONE

The accompanying map, the latest published of the Town of Stratford, shows the nine voting districts, from each of which will be elected a councilman at the fall election, these nine men in turn to choose a town manager, and start the ball rolling under the new council-manager form of government.

By a study of the map any resident of the Town can easily ascertain the voting district to which he or she belongs, as well as find out the districts adjoining, and those in which important parts of the Town are located. The boundaries as near as possible follow water lines, or the made to so law out the town that it will be compared to so law out the town that it will be compared to so law out the town that it will be compared to so law out the town that it will be compared to so law out the town that it will be compared to so law out the town that it will be compared to so law out the town that it will be compared to so law out the town that it will be compared to so law out the town that it will be compared to so law out the town that it will be compared to so law out the solution. made to so lay out the town that it will be comparatively easy for all interested to memorize the various districts.

As the map appears on this page the dark line running almost exactly horizontal, goes on Stratord avenue to South avenue, from city line to water. Everything south of this line, including Lordship, is in district No. 1.

District No. 2 lies immediately above No. 1, running through to Broad street, and as far west as Sound View avenue. The line runs on Barnum avenue between Sound View and Broad, and easterly this district goes to he water front. District No. 3 lies immediately north of No. 2, follows the harbor and Housatonic river to a line connecting ater front with Barnum avenue, this avenue forming the balance of the north and the northwestern boundary until Broad street is met again.

District No. 4 is just west of Nos. 2 and 3, taking in all territory west to city lines, the northern boundary running in the center of Broadbridge avenue to Dale aveue, and on Dale avenue to city line.

District No. 5 is north of No. 4 running north and west to town line, Barnum avenue to Nichols avenue, and Nichols avenue to town line forming the southeast and northeast boundary.

District No. 6, is a triangle. One end is the town line at Trumbull, Nichols avenue and Huntington road forming the other boundaries meeting in a near point at Barnum avenue between the two above mentioned street.

District No. 7 is the most peculiar in shape of any of the sections. It follows the water line from the end of Broad street to a point on the river northeast of the new Paradise Lawn section. A short line runs down to Wil-coxson avenue, which avenue forms the main part of the northern boundary, the western line running down Main District No. 8 lies immediately north of No. 7, Huntington road to Wigwam lane bounding it on the west, Wigwam lane to Cut Spring road, Cut Spring road to Main, and a line from Main to the river closing this se

District No. 9, includes all territory north of Nos. 6 and 8, to the Town line.

It is expected to again publish this map for the benefit of Stratford voters and readers of the Times. The map and description will again appear in the issue of Saturday, July 30.

"How long were you out?" inquired Assistant Prosecutor Vincent L. Keating.

"I haven't come to yet," responded lives.

Acting on Ives' complaint, the two officers visited the restaurant, and are said to have found Skodolski, Nelson and a friend of the latter's drinking in a back room. The owner of the establishment is said to have hurled a bottle of booze out of the window as the policemen entered. A short scuffle fallowed, and during the mix-up Mrs. Skodolski salleged to have tried to knock a bottle of liquor from the hands of one of the officers.

Judge Boardman found Skodolski sullty of selling liquor and keeping it with intent to sell, and on each of these counts imposed a fine of $100 and a suspended sentence of five days in jail. A five-days' jail term was at first decided upon for the assaukt charge, but a strong plea was offered by counsel for the restaurant man, and the sentence was finally changed to a fine of $50 with a suspended jail serrience of three days. Skodolski paid the fine.

Charges against Harry Olsen, of 268 Gregory strete, who is alleged to have operated a still in the Staples building at State and Court streets, were nolled and the man was turned over to the Federal authorities for prosecution.
