tion of the prohibition law had been presented for prosecution was sufficient to indicate that the bribes had not been accepted.

When told that the federal authorities in Boston had demanded that William J. McCarthy, McAuliffe's superior, give all information in his possession relative to the offering of money for law enforcement of the prohibition law, McAuliffe said this had already been freely given in Connecticut.

Mr. McAuliffe, when asked concerning one specific instance where a bribe had been offered to him mentioned a case in Bridgeport, but declined to name the man who had offered the bribe, he said the information had been turned over to the office of the United States attorney-general.
