NEW MILFORD.
THE BIG FIRE AT STILL RIVER.
Monday evening about 9 o'clock the whistle of the Bridgeport Wood Finishing Co blew in the night watchmen's works. The paint department and storage building of paint materials, together with the shipping office were burned to the ground and a large quantity of paints ready for shipment were destroyed. By plenty of hard work and by the assistance of plenty of help, the fire was kept to this one building which was fortunate indeed, and it being situated so closely to the large main building, it seems almost a miracle that it was not spread to the elements. The railroad bridge, crossing Still river, was set on fire and damaged slightly. Agent Theodore F. Platt of New Milford was arrested for smoking slumbers and he went down to see about the safety of the night trains in crossing over the bridge. After some delay and slight repairs the trains crossed over in safety and all trains are running as usual. This fire makes the third one in town within the last five weeks and it is believed to be an act of God, generally believed by many, that fires and accidents by three before there is a long lull in time between them. It is hoped there may be spared for a long spell before being obliged to give an account of more of like nature.
