Running Races

Two Jockeys Disciplined

The “Call’s” Selections to the Front. Eleven Out of a Possible Twenty Horse Named.

A propounder, accompanied by the horse management of the firm of Strang & Co., arrived at the track, and was seen pouring money for the purpose of betting. There was a large crowd of people waiting for the announcement of the race, and the real management of the company, who were also present, were the only ones to whom the list of the bets was given. The money was paid over to the cashier, who then handed it to the man in charge of the race, who distributed it among the different boxes, each amounting to $10. The bets were then opened for the public, and the public were permitted to place any amount they desired. The race was run in the usual manner, and the winners were awarded the money according to the usual rules.
