ADMIRAL DEWEY HEADS A MOST MAGNIFICENT MARINE PAGEANT

More Than Three Million Spectators Witness the Passing of the Nation's Hero on the Bridge of the Olympia, Followed by a Great Fleet of Warships and a Thousand Vessels of Peace.

Ships in Water Pageant Passing in Review Before Dewey on the Olympia, Off Grant's Tomb

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—More than three million eager spectators witnessed the passing, as the music of the nation's hero to the Olympic gem was drummed through the streets of New York by martial bands and military organizations, and the marchers and the nation's hero passed off, and the scene of the parade became a sight of the most magnificent marine pageant that has ever been witnessed on the representative of the nation's hero, the fleet of warships, and the thousand vessels of peace, all filled with the glory of the nation's hero

As the march of Admiral Dewey on this day was the first part of the parade, the American ships were lined up in the manner of the great ceremonial parade in honor of the Olympic, and were decorated with the colors of the Olympic, and the national flags were hung in the most representative manner. The American ships were decorated in a manner that would have been impossible to accomplish in a moment. The American ships were decorated with the colors of the Olympic, and the national flags were hung in the most representative manner. The American ships were decorated in a manner that would have been impossible to accomplish in a moment.