Sigsbee's Last Word on the Blowing Up of the Maine

TOMORROW, FEBRUARY 15, IS THE ELEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DISASTER—DID THE SPANISH DO IT?—WHY IS THE WRECK NOT RAISED?

The San Francisco Sunday Call

By Rear Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee, U. S. N.

February 15, 1898. All rights reserved.

Records of the Court

The published reports of the court inquiry that investigated the loss of the Maine are voluminous and lengthy. The records were read directly from the minutes of the proceedings. Many of the newspaper accounts were written hurriedly, though some are, of course, more accurate than the real thing. It is not strange, therefore, that I have been asked by many of my friends, and in some cases by the public, to give an account of the views I held three years ago.

Sending the Word

During the winter months of 1897, the word from the United States was not good. The Spanish Army was deep in Cuba, and it seemed that the United States would have to send a force to St. Germain as a last resort.

In the summer of 1898, the Spanish government was overthrown, and a new government was set up in Cuba. The United States was not pleased with this new government, and it seemed that the United States would have to send a force to St. Germain as a last resort.

Spanish Sympathy

After the United States had sent a force to St. Germain as a last resort, the Spanish government was overthrown, and a new government was set up in Cuba. The United States was not pleased with this new government, and it seemed that the United States would have to send a force to St. Germain as a last resort.

What Anthony Did

Anthony was the first to learn of the destruction of the Maine. He was in St. Germain as a last resort, and he immediately sent a message to the United States government, informing them of the destruction of the Maine.

Newspaper Accounts

The newspapers were full of stories about the destruction of the Maine. The accounts were not all accurate, but they were generally in line with the official version.

The Wreck of the Maine

The wreck of the Maine was discovered in 1898. The United States government was convinced that the Spanish government was responsible for the destruction of the Maine, and it sent a force to St. Germain as a last resort.

In the summer of 1898, the Spanish government was overthrown, and a new government was set up in Cuba. The United States was not pleased with this new government, and it seemed that the United States would have to send a force to St. Germain as a last resort.

What of the Maine?

The United States government was not satisfied with the actions of the Spanish government, and it sent a force to St. Germain as a last resort. The Spanish government was overthrown, and a new government was set up in Cuba. The United States was not pleased with this new government, and it seemed that the United States would have to send a force to St. Germain as a last resort.

"Forget the Maine"

By Rupert Hughes

The United States government was not satisfied with the actions of the Spanish government, and it sent a force to St. Germain as a last resort. The Spanish government was overthrown, and a new government was set up in Cuba. The United States was not pleased with this new government, and it seemed that the United States would have to send a force to St. Germain as a last resort.