

SCENES AT LONG BRANCH.

SKETCHES OF WHAT IS TO BE SEEN DURING THE SEASON.

Many Hotels, Cottages and Gambling Houses—Festive Girls in Shell-Shaped Chairs—The Moss Duke in Paradise, Held on Phil Daly's.

Of the four great seashore resorts near New York city, Coney Island is the place for day excursionists, Ocean Grove and Asbury Park the gathering place for those whom other people call pious and pious.

Long Branch is the spot where wealthy Hebrews and summer guests from points outside of New York city congregate, while Newport is where the blue bloods, the self-styled aristocracy of New York city have cottages during the four warm months which are called the season.

The chief features of Long Branch are the hotels and cottages and the gambling houses. It is getting the fashion now for a central dining room, kitchen and restaurant to be built, with a limited number of lodging rooms attached.

Such a group of hotels and cottages is the Elberon, with the Franklin cottage, where Garfield died.

At the best of times, even from Saturday night to Monday morning, there are three women to one man at Long Branch, as at all watering places.

The marriageable young man who is there, who has plenty of clothes and money to pay his board, may be considered to be in paradise.

It is called the Pennsylvania Club house, because it is said to have been started, in the first place, for the accommodation of rich Philadelphians.

Why a man should write a long letter and write it plainly, signing it at the end with name that would have bothered Daniel to decipher, is more than I can understand.

Why don't some enterprising newspaper correspondents interview a high official and get the moral bottom—Merchant Traveler.

His Will Saved Him. The following story is that of the individual who had long officiated as the gatekeeper at the presidential mansion in Washington.

CARLISLE D. GRAHAM.

The Cooper Who Shot Niagara Rapids in a Barrel.

Four men have passed through the Niagara whirlpool rapids and come out alive. In 1881 the little steamer Maid of the Mist passed through.

Graham is 31 years old, and has spent much of his life knocking about the world. He has been all around it, for one thing.
