WASP Head Believes Women Pilots Face Duty on War Fronts

By ZENA HULDSON

CAMP HANGER, Va. — Miss Jacqueline Cochran, directed as pilot of the first all-WASP air transport service over the entire length of the United States, last week revealed some details of the course she is to run. She was named a WASP (Women Airforce Services Pilots) for the occasion.

"In the future," Miss Cochran said, "it is to be expected that the WASP will be used to meet a variety of military needs, including the transport of personnel and equipment from one point to another. In this way, the WASP will be able to contribute to the national defense in many ways."

The WASP is a group of highly trained and experienced women pilots who have volunteered to serve their country in the military, and who have been selected for this purpose by the government. The WASP was formed in 1943, and has been active in training and providing pilots for the military ever since.

Reporter Recalls Thrilling Trip From Britain to Sweden by Air

BY MARY SLATTON

LONDON, July 21 — Mrs. Thomas E. S. Cox, who volunteered her services on the British Air Force as a war correspondent, has returned to this country to report the thrilling trip she made to Britain by air. She has been in Britain for several weeks, and has been a great help to the British people in their work for the war effort.

"The trip was a very exciting one," Mrs. Cox said. "I was able to see the people of Britain at work, and to get a better understanding of their war efforts. I believe that the British people will be victorious, and I hope that they will be able to achieve their goal."
