Nazi-Red Alliance in '40 Made U.S. Stand Difficult
Former Secretary Hall Tells How Oumansky Demanded Latest War Equipment While Shielding Aggressive Moves

Our relations with Russia in 1940 were influenced by the desire of the United States to maintain an equitable balance of power in Europe, and by the belief that the United States could not maintain such a balance without taking a position that would enable it to control the situation in Europe. For many months of that year it was clear to us that the British and French governments were not taking the necessary steps to control the situation in Europe.

It is necessary to remember that the British and French governments were at that time the most powerful governments in Europe, and that the United States was not a party to the European conflict. It is also necessary to remember that the British and French governments were at that time the most powerful governments in the world, and that their policy was directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The British and French governments were at that time the most powerful governments in the world, and their policy was directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. They were at that time the most powerful governments in the world, and their policy was directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. The British and French governments were at that time the most powerful governments in the world, and their policy was directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

In the fall of 1940, the British and French governments were at that time the most powerful governments in the world, and their policy was directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. They were at that time the most powerful governments in the world, and their policy was directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. The British and French governments were at that time the most powerful governments in the world, and their policy was directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The British and French governments were at that time the most powerful governments in the world, and their policy was directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. They were at that time the most powerful governments in the world, and their policy was directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. The British and French governments were at that time the most powerful governments in the world, and their policy was directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

Russia Knits Mid-European Nations Together by Many Pacts

The Red Basket, a high-quality Russian magazine, has just published a series of articles on the situation in Europe, and the relationship between Russia and the other European powers. The articles are written by a Russian correspondent who has been in Europe for many months, and who is well informed on the situation.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.

The correspondent writes that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe. He states that the Russian government is at this time the most powerful government in Europe, and that its policy is directed at maintaining an equitable balance of power in Europe.