Musical Debut at Easton

Two of Washington's most talented and promising young vocal artists, Miss Esther Armstrong, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Armstrong, of the Olympia Apartments, and Miss Dorothy Hodcekin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Hodcekin, of 1825 Calvert street, Woodley, made their musical debut Wednesday night before one of the largest audiences ever assembled in the Easton Music Hall.

Both young women were perfectly at ease and not a trace of the so-called stage fright was visible. Miss Armstrong's rendition of "Who Knows," by Hall, seemed to strike a responsive chord in the audience, as she was encored several times, until her personality was brought into play and she was permitted to retire. Miss Hodcekin featured in "The Lay of the Land," from "Dolly Varden," by Julian Edwards, and her charming voice joined with her pleasing manner completely won the audience.

Although neither of these girls ever appeared before in public many predicted that it would be but a short time until both of them would be well known to music lovers of the American stage.

After Miss Armstrong and Miss Hodcekin made such successful entries Mr.

Green, who has been their teacher for the past several months, staged a one-act playlet, entitled "Paquerette," which made a decided hit with the audience. Mr. Barrett, the phenomenal young pianist, accompanied the young ladies and also rendered several selections on the piano which were appreciated. Practically all of Easton looks forward to the next visit of Prof. Green and troupe and he has promised to make it in the near future.
