

TREND TOWARD DEMOCRACY

The Lesson of the Elections in the Cities of Ohio.

Representative Norton Discusses the Recent Contests—Voters Allowed to Register Their Free Will—Tom L. Johnson's Sweeping Victory.

Representative Norton returned to Washington yesterday from Ohio, where he has been in the thick of the mayoralty contests which have been enervating the politics of the Buckeye State for several weeks past.

He inclines to the opinion that there is a great deal doing in politics in Ohio, and that the straws showing the way the wind blew in the mayoralty contests were many, and were definite in the trend they indicated.

"No one can deny that the city elections show a remarkable increase in the power of the Democratic party in the State of Ohio," he said last night. "In many cases Democratic mayors have been elected where Democratic mayors have not held the seat for generations, and the war has been carried into Africa with a vengeance."

"I think that the people are, to a great degree, naturally Democratic. One has only to go to the figures and facts of these recent elections to show it."

"Hanna and his crowd did not make much of an effort to influence the city elections. They could not do it, because they had no money at hand to use."

"The victory of Henckle was one worthy of notice. He won without any assistance, and against the opposition of all the politicians; even the most influential of his own party."

"Tom Johnson, in Cleveland, did the same thing as did Henckle, and did it handsomely. The Democrats are beginning to look upon Johnson as a candidate for high offices."

"We hardly realize that it is medicine, when taking Carver's Little Liver Pills; they are so small, so had effects, all troubles from torpid liver are relieved by their use."

ING MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP AND EVERYTHING.

"He is certainly a man with a future. He is a big man in every respect, bright and intellectual, and a fine politician, a good speaker, and personally attractive."

"The Republicans have been redistricting the State in order to be definitely sure of a Republican Legislature. They had planned to have about sixty-nine Republicans to thirty-eight Democrats, but the outcome of the mayoralty has quite upset the calculations."

There is a large collection of busts and relief portraits of authors, poets, musicians, statesmen, and other distinguished persons in the copyright division of the Library of Congress.

ART GALLERY FOR THE BLIND

Disposition of the Busts at the Congressional Library.

At the time of the death of ex-President Harrison the blind were much interested in him and his history, and were given some interesting talks by different persons.

When told this incident Mr. Putnam said that the blind are interested in the reading of the names of the busts and in the subject for copyright, but instead a photograph, so the collection will not grow.

THE EASTER EGG ROLLING

Children to Hold High Carnival on the White Lot Today.

The Music to Be Provided by the Fourth Artillery Band From Fort Monroe—History of Custom Brought in Washington and Elsewhere.

Children and grown people will gather today, if the weather is fine, in the lot behind the Executive Mansion and continue a custom the origin of which goes back to pagan antiquity.

With the usual Presidential generosity, orders have been issued for opening the grounds to the public without restriction on Easter Monday for the egg rolling and the other games and pastimes peculiar to the day.

For several days, the President's garden, Henry Plater, has been at work arranging for the protection of his plants and shrubs.

The egg rolling custom has existed in Washington for forty odd years, as plenty of men now in the decline of life can testify.

At the hour of the hill stood a fountain, and the games of the day, the merry-making, music, and the rest centered about the fountain.

What Fifth Avenue is to New York on a Sunday afternoon, Connecticut Avenue was to Washington yesterday. It was a grand parade where fashion displayed all the artifice and style of the dressmaker and milliner.

With the song of many birds chirping overhead, the parade of the most beautiful of the day was in full swing.

Finally the parade was over, and the crowd dispersed. The parade was a grand success, and the people were very much pleased.

FASHION'S ANNUAL PARADE

The Easter Promenade Along Connecticut Avenue.

Beautiful Gowns Displayed on the Thoroughfare—A Cosmopolitan Crowd—Social Relations Touched Elbows With Those Less Fortunate.

Dame Fashion in all her regal splendor and glory of spring attire held high carnival upon the principal thoroughfares of Washington yesterday afternoon.

Women accustomed to riding in victorias, and who disdain to mingle with the motley throng upon the sidewalks yesterday tripped gaily along the smooth pavements, and brushed elbows with their less handsomely gowned sisters.

It was a cosmopolitan crowd, which represented all classes and conditions of society, and fashion's models, department clerks and shop girls, all dressed in their Sunday best, so that few could distinguish between the stations in life which the happy promenade occupied.

It was not exactly an ideal day for the gentle zephyrs of spring had grown into heavy blasts of wind, and this fact went to make walking somewhat laborious.

It was a grand parade where fashion displayed all the artifice and style of the dressmaker and milliner.

With the song of many birds chirping overhead, the parade of the most beautiful of the day was in full swing.
