NO. 15—OLD SCORE KEEPING.

In the base ball guide of the early days it was required that the scorer should be "one who previously market will render him acceptable to all who are likely to make inquiries of him relating to the score of the game." It was Henry Chadwick who derived the first adequate method of keeping scores. In the days of the Knickerbocker Club they tailed such in the same manner. Rip Van Winkle tailed his score on the one page. It was the old New York game "chop" played, when bases were called and老太太. But by the time the Red Stockings were in full tar, there was a shorthand of score keeping as intricate as it is today and as full of personal
