

That's Enough!

so little ...
but you
get the most complete
mouth and throat
cleansing
you ever had

here's why!

One mouthful of LAVORIS, vigorously swished and
gargled, breaks up
and flushes out the film
or coating on mouth
and throat tissues—
the "bed" where germs
thrive and where most mouth odors are born.

Your mouth feels clean
because it is clean!

The Mouth,
you know, is a Gateway of Infection —
Keep it Clean.

LAVORIS
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
MOUTHWASH AND GARGLE

Tongue with oils of cinnamon
and cloves

COMPLETED CLEANSING

DEMOCRACY IN DANGER!

Continued from page seven

a check for $250 to help take care of some of your campaign expenses."

"That would be fine," I answered gratefully, "but I think you are entitled to be told in advance that I am opposed to the bill you are sponsoring to change the state health laws."

The voice hesitated, then mumbled a polite reply and the receiver clicked in my ear. I knew the $250 never would be forthcoming.

I couldn't help thinking of the countless times such an offer will be repeated all over the country during this critical election year of 1952.

Can a candidate take a contribution and still defy the contributor's demands? Along with my wife, who also is a member of the Oregon legislature, I was offered a donation by a wealthy man with dairy holdings. Because we were pushing a bill to legalize colored margarine, we decided that we had to turn down the donation or else abandon the bill. We could not see ourselves going against the interests of a man whose money we had accepted. It seemed to us that the poet in old England was right when he said, "He who takes the King's shilling must do the King's business."

This is why gangsters and gamblers, barred from office themselves by public opinion, can gain great influence through financial favors.

Money for Both

HONEST views about government sometimes have so little to do with political donations that many people give money to both sides. They don't care to be on the outs with any group which might ascend to power. I talked with a liquor salesman in one state who donated funds to opposing gubernatorial candidates.

"If I can't sell to the state liquor stores I'm out of business," he explained. "Making a campaign contribution is the way I keep in good standing."

The Federal Hatch Act is supposed to restrict the annual expenditures of a party's national committee to $3,000,000. This sounds effective, but each major party has evaded the act simply by organizing satellite committees with high-sounding names. Through these subordinate groups the parties spend as much as they can collect.

Somewhere along the line, contributors will talk bluntly to party henchmen. A paper mill may hope to continue to dump chemical wastes in a navigable river where people swim and fish or even get their drinking supply. Truckers may want to forestall any Federal discussion of highway mileage taxes. These talks may never reach the ears of the Presidential nominees, but the party "wheels" will be thoroughly aware of obligations that eventually must be fulfilled.

Hatch Act Fails

THE Hatch Act "limits" a citizen to $5,000 in campaign contributions to any committee or candidate during a year. This is avoided by a number of easy devices. After all, a baby qualifies as an individual. Infants in families have been known to make $5,000 campaign donations before they left the bassinet. And the many separate committees with high-flown titles, such as War-Veterans for Black or Business Men Behind White, always have been useful channels for receiving numerous different $5,000 gratuities from the same person or family.

And if the Hatch Act has failed completely to control political donations by millionaires, the Smith-Connally Bill of 1943 has failed equally to prevent election spending by labor unions.

This act branded it against the law for "any labor organization to make a campaign contribution in connection with any election at which a President is to be

Continued on page 32

NEW HI-WAIST

bantum

completely eliminates junior figure tummy bulge and waist roll!

by Youthcraft

The pancake-fat tummy...
the sleek-waist look is all yours
with new Hi-Waist BANTUM.
Lightweight, lingerie-lovely BANTUM
has a center seam control panel and 50 rows of stitches that combine to pull your tummy up and hold it
in completely but comfortably.
And the non-binding waistband is designed extra-high to smooth out every trace of waist roll—leaving you
in perfect shape.
At your favorite store. $6.95
Small, medium and large sizes in regular and panty-girdle styles.
Other Bantum styles $5.95 up.
YOUTH CRAFT CREATIONS, Inc.
200 Madison Ave., New York 16

PATENT PENDING