Without any circumlocution, the President brought up the Dupuy de Lome incident. He briefly stated the facts as they had been represented to him by Judge Day and suggested that until a full report from Minister Wood-ford was received that the subject be ford was received that the subject be hald upon the table. After some little discussion the proposition met with approval, but not until the Cabinet was given to understand that the President expected to receive a proper disavowal by the Spanish government of the sentiments expressed by Dupuy de Lome in his obnoxious Canalejas letter. It was agreed that sufficient time should be given Spain to make known her disapproval. If it is not received before the Cabinet meets next Tuesday, it is said on high authority the recall of Gen. Woodford will be cabled and friendly diplomatic relations with Spain will be liplomatic relations with Spain will be

FEELING IN THIS COUNTRY.

More Than a Personal Affront to the President Seen in the Letter.

Now that the first excitement attend ing the publicity given the De Lome letter has passed away, public men and nen are beginning to consider it in the light of sober second thought and calm judgment and reason. They see more in that letter than the personal affront to the President of the United The letter is a remarkably frank and candid admission of the fact -long suspected in this country-that was dealing with the United States after the fashion peculiar to the politics and diplomacy of that government. De Lome admits in this letter that the government of Spain was pur-sulng a policy of duplicity; that there was nothing at all in their pretended desire for reciprocity arrangements be-tween Spain and the United States, and that the whole thing was a scheme and a device intended only to consume time and to give Spain a way to pre-pare for the struggle, which she be-eved was inevitable. This is by far the most serious part of the whole letter. It goes beyond the personal expression of the minister from Spain, because it is a declaration concerning the policy of his govern-ment, and that part of his letter must either be disavowed by Spain or that government must admit that it was a party to De Lome's duplicity. The mere acceptance of the resignation of the Spanish minister, etatesinen say, will not be sufficient for this Government, if Spain continues to remain silient she admits that De Lome told the trath when he said in his letter he had made a dupe of the State Depart-ment and had wheedled it into considering the subject of reciprocity between the two governments. There is a wide difference between the open-handed and trank manner in which diplomatic affairs are handled by Americans and the underhand and sneaking meth-ods of the diplomatic school from which De Lome seems to have graduated. When therefore, the Spanish minister represented to the American Government that Spain really desired to con-sider the subject of reciprocity, with a view to bringing the two governments warer together and mutually benefitcommerce of the two nations the United States accepted this proffer in the belief that it was honestly exthe new relations which reoprocity ould bring about.

It should be remembered that just about the time the Spanish minister began to suggest a discussion of the subject of reciprocity the Administra-tion was seriously considering the advisability of taking active measures to put a stop to some of the crueffies that were being practiced by Spain in Cuba. Every movement made by Spain van carefully watched and she was ven full credit for every step taken that looked to the amelioration of the dis-tressing conditions in that island. The ourtarities practiced upon the Cubans upon innocent men and women, and the cruelties and indignities suffered by the los had almost, it is asserted. arotised President McKinley to th

Spanish Trickery.

Then it was in order to gain time to make it appear that Spain was really seeking to do something honorable that the hypocritical suggestion for reclprocity came from the fellow who is about to shake the dust of the United States from his feet and return to his cineyards in Spain, where he can pur sue his proper avocation away from the society of decent men. Within the last nty-four hours many public men of at the White House have vis ted the President and urged him to re-tise to ignore that part of De Lome's letter which admits hypocrisy and du-pticity and the connivance of the Spanish minister in the dirty work of De Louie. The President has been urg-ed repeatedly to insist that Spain be required to respond to a demand for an explanation of this part of the letter. Inasmuch as it has been shown that city was used by the Spaniard: simply as a cloak under which they were pursuing war preparations, the President has been most persistently urged to withdraw his note offering friendly intervention to bring the in Cuba to a close, and to give that government notice that unless in thirty days the war is ended and peace has on established the United States Intervene, declare peace, and maintain it with whatever force may be neces-

There has been a great deal of talk along this line at the Capitol. Senators and Representatives who have a warm spot in their hearts for Cuban patriots are hoping that this policy will be pursued, for they believe the time has come for this Government to act re-gardless of what Spain may do, and especially is this true since the Spanish policy has been unmasked, and De Lome, who, as a dipiomat, has been playing the spy, has unmasked the des-picable policy of the government he represented.

Gen. Grosvenor, of Ohio, is one those in the house who have been urging the President to intervene to stop the war. He wants this intervention to be war. He wants this intervention to be without force, if it is possible and can be accomplished, but he is willing it should be forcible if force must be used. On the Senate side, Senator Chandler expresses the belief that the Chandler expresses the belief that the President will take some active step in the immediate future. Mr. Chandler takes the view that there is but one thing that can save the Republican party from defeat in the coming elections and that one thing he says is an aggresses to foreign policy. Mr. Chandler aggressive foreign policy. Mr. Chan-dier is too much of a patriol and too warm a friend of Cuba to seek inter-vention in Cuban affairs as a political measure, but there is a suspicion that the political glory that may come from the political glory that may come from guests visiting the ladies of the receiv-ing line was followed in a few moments the political glory that may come from it is the only thing that will force the President of the United States to intervene. The money question should be ignored by both Houses of Congresss." said Mr. Chandler, "and Cuba and Ha-wati should both be annexed." Senator Chandler believes in Cuban independence and said yesterday that he thought that independence would be proclaimed before this Congress adjourned.

The Cushing's Mission.

The costing's Mission.

The story has been repeatedly given out at the Navy Department that the torpedo boat Cushing was to sail to white corded slik, the low corsage out-Havana with provisions for the Maine. The constant reiteration of this report leads to the belief that if Secretary Long were to tell the country that the moon was filled with cheese, the country would be compelled to believe it. The Cushing is going to Havana, but she is not going there to carry supplies to the battleship. She could not possibly carry a ton of coal or a case of meat more than is absolutely necessary for her own purposes. The only supplies she takes to Havana consist of two or three naval cipher code books, one of which goes to Consul General Lee. These books are never trusted either to the mail or to the express. They are constantly under the personal supervision of the naval officers of the United States and the critical condition of affairs in Havana may be understood when the department reaches the leads to the belief that if Secretary stood when the department reaches the conclusion that it is high time Consul General Lee be put in possession of the naval cipher.

These men com-municated with each other at frequent and agreed upon intervals, and by these means were enabled to know that the cable was not being tampered with. The battleship Maine was under full steam and had that cable ceased to work for one half hour. Commander Sigshee was under orders to at once sail for the city of Havana. THE CONDUCT OF DE LOME.

Sagasta Says That It Was Most Imprudent.

Madrid, Feb. 11.-The Imparcial pubishes an Interview with Prime Minister Sagasta, in which he says that Senor de Lome's conduct was most imprudent. He adds that the contents of the letter are the exact antithesis of Senor de Lome's official dispatches, which represented President McKinley in the most favorable light. Senor de Lome never complained of Mr. McKipley's attitude, Senor Sagasta admitted that the occurrence might possibly infin-nce the relations between the two countries, but he hoped only slightly.

Senor Canalejas, to whom the letter was addressed, says that when he was visiting Senor de Lome the latter always referred to Mr. McKinley in terms of

The Third Reception of President and Mrs. McKinley.

THE DISPLAY OF UNIFORMS

It Makes the Scene Ore of Striking Brilliancy-The Decorations Are on a Most Extravagant Scale-The Spanish Charge d'Atfaires Is Among the Many Guests.

The reception given by President and Mrs. McKinley last night was notably the largest and in some respects the most brilliant of the season.

The gold braid and brass buttons of the army and navy made almost as spectacular a display as the court uniforms worn by the diplomats on the oc casion of the first reception, and to the floral decorations were added a patriotic gorgeousness of red, white and blue that expressed itself in shields, anchors and stars, some in immortelles set high up on the surface of the great mirrors and fluted arches, and others glowing in electric lights in the national shades,

Each doorway and window was draped with large flags of silk and bunting, and over the arch that divides the corridor from the official stairway was a gigantic frieze of crimson bunting, from which a particularly aggressive-looking gilt eagle surveyed, as if with an eye to future possibilities, the sons of Mars and Neptune who made up so largely the crowds below. The patriol-ism of the hour, however, was not exrine band stationed in the conservathe band stationed in the conserva-tory, or the Fourth Artillery band of the Washington Barracks, which occu-pled the hallway leading to the green roem, which rendered a splendid pro-gram of operate selections, but whose only number in the least relating to the nature of the event was a patrol en-titled. ing line was followed in a few moments by the Presidential party, led as usual, by Col. Bingham and Lieut. Gilmore. President and Mrs. McKinley passed into the blue room, where Mrs. McKin-ley, as is her custom, seated herself on one of the blue and gold couches that mark the receiving line. She wore a beautiful tollet of silver white satin brocade and lace, and in her hair a white ostrich tip was fastened with a

Mrs. Sherman wore garnet velvet and diamonds; Mrs. Alger, white satin bro-cade with jeweled front and diamonds; Mrs. Griggs, yellow satin and white lace; Mrs. Gary, white brocaded satin with a dog collar of crimson velvet and ame Wu, and immediately after paying his respects passed behind the receiving line and stood at the back of Mrs. McKinley's lounge, where he was an intrested spectator of the passing show, showing his smiling approval as his official household passed, bowing his official household passed, bowing
