Many of the Modes Being Exclusive With Woodward & Lothrop

Our patrons have been led to expect much of these occasions and we are sure they will not be disappointed in the fashion delineations here set forth in their excellence and elegance.

IN THE REALM OF NEW THINGS.

The most noticeable style feature is diversity, with a predominating note of simplicity.

The fabrics used are soft and light of weight, but of a heavy and rich appearance.

Pur is used lavishly in trimming suits and coats.

Coat collars grow larger and cuffs deeper.

Waists and Dresses nearly all have touches of braiding or embroidery.

Evening Gowns are of the most unusual color combinations.

A decided preference is noted for the New Orchid Shade for evening wear.

Rubber Gray is a new color rapidly becoming very popular.

The Crown Collar on waists and dresses makes the neck finish more becoming and neat.

The Vodka Waist effect is prominent in the new waists and dresses; a Vodka suggestion is seen on some of the elaborate Coats.

Yarn embroidery and Chenille trimming are used on dresses, blouses and millinery.

Metal Cloth is combined most effectively with silks, nets and velvets for evening wear.

Fox, Seal and Mole are the most popular furs of the season.

Oriental, Japanese and Bulgarian colorings are boldly used on some of the garments, and are very effectively harmonized with the soft shaded fabrics.

Heavy Beaded Bandings trim the daintiest and sheerest Georgette crepe waists and dresses.

Sequins retain their popularity as a trimming; the bodices of many evening dresses are completely fashioned of them.

Skirts to suits and dresses are fuller, and remain quite short.

The millinery models are more distinctive and individual than ever, marked with simplicity and diversity.

Fur Stoles and Scarfs are taking the place of the animal neckpiece in many instances.

Many of the coat suits are lined to the waist with white, and below the waist with self-colored silk; others have elaborate figured linings.

Gold and Silver Flowers trim many of the evening gowns.

Much favoritism is shown the One-Piece Serge Dress.

Burgundy and taupe are recognized as the leading colors.

Pockets are all shapes and sizes.

Handsome embroidered buttons are freely used as trimmings.

The Long Coat is unusually popular; Cut Bolivia Cloth is one of the richest fabrics ever used for coats.

Inset girdles and inverted sash effects are new touches to be found on several of the very individual coats.

Carved, jeweled and painted buttons, immense in size, trim some of the handsome coats and suits.

Long, flowing sleeves are noted in some of the more extreme evening gowns.

The collar detail on one-piece dresses is very important.
