WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 29, 1890.

FINE PARTY WORK.

Notwithstanding the determination of the Republican Senatorial caucus last night to call the River and Harbor bill up the latter part of this or early next week, owing to the pressure from the Pacific Coast, it is nevertheless a fact that the Republican leaders have decided to hold the bill back for final action to the last. It is their only chance to hold a quorum for the passage of the wild and vicious political measures they have concocted. The personal interest of the various Representatives in the appropriations contained in that bill is supposed to be the only consideration left with sufficient power to cause a quorum to remain in the city.

By passing the bill through the Senate, with numerous amendments, as will be done within the next two weeks, probably, and sending it to conference, the Republicans hope to avoid the charge of trifling with the business interests of the country. A quorum of the House, of course, will have to be present when it comes to the consideration of this conference report. By holding the bill back, in conference, until the expiring days of the session it is thought a majority of the Representatives can be held in the city. There is no other motive strong enough to keep them here.

In the meantime the public works already begun and scattered in all parts of the country will be going to ruin. Work on them of course had to stop with the expiration of the appropriations at the end of the last fiscal year. Under the present programme of the Republican party no appropriations are likely to be available for their prosecution until September 1, and none may be until October 1, or even later, perhaps too late to be of any use during the present fiscal year.

The public interests are thus made to suffer in order that the Republican party may pass its outrageous Tariff Bill and its infamous Force bill. The utter recklessness of that party, and its entire lack of interest in the public welfare, are clearly shown in the way it proposes to use the great River and Harbor bill to further its partisan purposes.

AN EMINENT OSTRICH.

There is something pathetic in the present predicament of the Atlanta Constitution. Its efforts to keep up a hurrah and to pose as the author and presiding genius thereof are at once admirable and sad. Its Sunday edition sports an editorial page devoted almost entirely to double leaded arguments and insinuations to the effect that it has launched, and is now conducting to a successful consummation, the greatest political propaganda of the age. Ignoring the fact that it has been snubbed and discredited, the Constitution goes right ahead, assuring its readers that it was the first one to awaken the country from a fatal lethargy, and to start the agitation that will soon culminate in the death of the infamous Force bill.

Nothing could better illustrate the splendid spirits of the Constitution than an extract from its Sunday leader, under the head of "The Work of a Week." Here is the opening thereof:

"A week ago all was gloom and despair.

"The Force bill hung over us like a sword.

"Our friends in the North were silent and listless: our enemies were active and exultant.

"Under the outrageous gag rules of the House the infamous Force bill was rushed through, and its Northern opponents failed to make themselves heard. The Senate, bulldozed by Dictator Reed, and informed that the President stood ready, pen in hand, to sign the bill before the ink was dry, met the revolutionists half way, and showed a disposition to obey orders from headquarters.

"In this emergency, the Constitution, with a full appreciation of the dire perils of the situation, sounded the alarm."

Then, after showing how the Constitution's loud alarm had aroused freedom everywhere at once, the Constitution concludes:

"The clouds are rolling by—the skies are brightening. If the Constitution by its decided stand for the right has in some degree contributed to this result, it desires to emphasize the fact that its action has been in the interests of peace and loyalty, for the common good of all, and to strengthen the primary object of the founders of the republic—'a more perfect union.' * * *

"The work of the week will make a shining page in our historic record. Let it go bravely on!"

When one considers that the press of the country, including scores of Republican and independent journals, has been blistering the Force bill for weeks, that the Constitution's sole prominence in the controversy was achieved by proposing something which the entire South repudiated with indignation and ridicule; this outburst is one of the most moving exhibitions we have witnessed for many and many a day.

MR. INGALLS' STATEMENT yesterday is regarded in some quarters as an announcement, not only of his approval of the Lodge Force bill, but of his conviction that that measure will become a law during this session of Congress. It is not credible that any intelligent observer of public events could have doubted Senator Ingalls' approval of the bill. It has been generally understood that he favored it and would vote for it. But whether he thinks it will pass the Senate is a very different matter. So far as the CRITIC is concerned, we believe it will pass, and we have always thought that Senator Ingalls believed it, to. It is a party measure, and if ever a partisan Congress has sat in the Capitol it is the present one. There are Senators on the Republican side who know that the bill as an outrageous invasion of popular rights, but how many will, when the time comes, have the courage of their convictions.

WE ARE GLAD and gratified to observe that the Commissioners have at last determined to refurnish the Cogswell fountain at the intersection of Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue. Ten days or a fortnight ago THE CRITIC called attention to its neglected condition, and deplored such treatment of a handsome public property donated to the city by a generous and wealthy admirer, though not a resident of the Capital. The Commissioners, however, have now interested themselves, and the order was yesterday given to restore the water connections. THE CRITIC does not parade this circumstance as a flagrant evidence that it is running the town and influencing the action of public officials from the President down, but we take this occasion to compliment the Commissioners upon their readiness to accept a suggestion respectfully offered, and having as its motive nothing but the public good.

BROTHER JOHN WANAMAKER gives the girls some nice, frugal advice in his cheap Philadelphia column this morning. He says: "This 7c Gingham was 10c only a little time back. Very likely no better quality is now 10c, or more, in some stores. The wonder is to find it at 7c. Good for service, safe to wash, heavy enough for careless wear in careless places, and sightly enough for any Gingham turnout."

Great Scott! What does he mean by "careless wear in careless places!" Has the painted one been taking a night off with the chippies?

THERE IS TALK to the effect that the Republican leaders are considering measures of "retaliation" against Great Britain, through Canada. Does that mean that we have really been bullied, as everybody now believes, and that the best we can do is to make faces at the bully? If it doesn't mean that, what is there to retaliate about.

IT APPEARS THAT Senator Carlisle's constituents can get information from him when they want it, and in neat and compact packages at that.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Edward Bok, the editor of The Ladies' Home Journal, sailed on Thursday last on the Augusta Victoria for an extended tour through Europe. As one of the very youngest and brightest representatives of American journalism, it is not unlikely that Mr. Bok will receive considerable attention from the famous literary people he is to meet. He goes freighted with letters of introduction from prominent Americans to many of the most distinguished people abroad and will return home early in October, after visiting London, Paris, Berlin, Edinburgh, Amsterdam and other European capitals.

The President and Secretary Halford were lost in the woods while riding near Bladensburg a few days ago. Night coming on, they saw the lights of the Capital, and were thus guided home.

Mr. William Waldorf Astor some time ago offered to the vestry of Trinity Church to furnish the church with bronze gates, of design to be approved by the vestry, as a memorial to his father, the late John Jacob Astor. The offer has been accepted.

Professor Hasse, formerly Professor of Medicine in the University of Gottingen, and the oldest teacher in its medical faculty, celebrated his 80th birthday on June 23. The veteran professor, who is still in full vigor of body and mind, received congratulatory telegrams from the cultus minister, Herr von Goessler; from the medical faculties of Gottingen, Leipsig, Heidelberg and Zurich, and from a host of friends and pupils.

Many changes have been made in the bed rooms at the White House within the past year, and when at home the President and Mrs. Harrison occupy the famous Prince of Wales chamber at the southwestern extremity of the second floor, the doors opening into the cosy sitting room.

An expedition started by the Seattle Press has explored the Olympic range of mountains for the first time. Among other journalists after whom the physical features of the range were named are Mount Childs, after Mr. George William Childs, proprietor of the Philadelphia Ledger; Mount Dana, after Mr. Charles A. Dana, editor and proprietor of the New York Sun, and Mount Grady, after the late Henry Grady, editor of the Atlanta Constitution.

THE WAY OF THE SUMMER GIRL.

A little summer flirtation,
Started out by a tear or a frown,
Yet she finds cause for desertion
When she gets back to the town.

A little summer engagement,
On which not a shadow falls,
Yet the result is entanglement
When the winter months calls.

I ask for no explanation,
Yet to me this thing is clear—
That she'll keep her reputation
When we meet again next year.
—New York Herald.

HOW SHE GOES TO BED.

ARTS WHICH A SWELL YOUNG LADY PRACTICES BEFORE RETIRING.

Some of the Secrets of My Lady's Dressing-Room Disclosed—Treatment for the Nails, Teeth and Complexion.

"Curtis Cardine" in Chicago Evening News.

A man will go to his room at night, and if there isn't a match handy, he won't even trouble to get a light.

He simply gets out of his duds as quickly as possible and jumps into bed without more ado.

Now, let us watch a girl and consider her ways:

First of all she must have a light, and a good bright one. She may have been entertaining her young man in the parlor until—well—we will say, until bedtime, or she may have been out to a party, but that doesn't make any difference. A girl has a regular way of going to bed that she does not depart from on any account.

The moment she enters the room she goes straight to the dresser and looks in the glass. I have seen a girl go down on her knees and scan every feature, turning her face this way and that, as if what she saw was something quite new to her. Then the sweet girl

BEGINS TO UNDRESS.

She takes off her waist, views for a moment her pretty neck and arms, then she slowly slips out of her skirts and dons a silken robe de chambre—for our girl is very swell.

The robe is loose, of pink, blue or white, with cascades of lace falling all about the neck and bosom and way down to the dainty feet. It isn't buttoned—just tied with ribbons. Next the hair-pins come out, and down falls the hair. It has been washed in soda or ammonia once a month to make it fluffy, and also to give it the golden-brown hue so much admired. Mrs. Potter's copper-colored tresses owe much of their luster to the frequent washings in soda and champagne which her maid gives them. Our girl brushes her hair and braids it in a loose braid; but she doesn't twist it up into hideous curl papers. Curling-irons have done away with all of that, and the dear girl is just as lovely after the ball with all her finery off, as she was during it.

And now she takes a bit of silk and draws it carefully between her teeth. It gets out all the particles that a tooth-brush can't reach; then she takes a little orange-wood stick, dips it into a little round silver thing that holds powdered orris root, and proceeds to scour each individual tooth, after which the tooth brush and a cup of warm water finish the operation. She would rather do this every night than pay dentists' bills, she says.

Of course, the bath is the most essential thing about the toilet, but our girl takes hers in the morning. She does wash her hands and face, however, with water as hot as she can bear it. She uses a flannel cloth and holds it several minutes against every part of her face and neck.

MISS SALLIE HARGOUS, who is famous for her peachy skin, says that she owes it all to hot water. "Its the best remedy in the world for sunburn," says Miss Sallie, "and no one who uses it persistently will have pimples or black-heads." And now the nails must be attended to; just a little clip here and there with the scissors, a rub with the polisher and a touch of cold cream to keep them brilliant.

There are a thousand and one things that some girls do after they go to their rooms at night. They take medicines and pills and powders and cough syrups; they use inhalers, atomizers, flesh brushes, and dumb-bells. Our girl has no need of all these. She sticks to

HER OUNCE OF PREVENTION.

There are girls, too, who think they must have something to eat or drink before retiring.

Miss Kathryn Kidder, who appears to the public as such an ethereal, dainty creature, eats a big saucer of onions every night. She munches them while her maid combs her hair. And Miss Dorothy Dene, the young English actress, sits up in bed until 1 o'clock in the morning with a novel in her hand and a big plate of cake on her lap. She reads the novel and eats the cake; and the most astonishing part of it is, not that she doesn't have indigestion, but that she doesn't die, for with the cake she drinks quantities of chocolate.

And now, out goes the light and down goes the curtain. The scene is done.

A FEARLESS ORGAN

Hiding Republican Profligacy by a Device in Bookkeeping.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat (Rep.).

To permit the Government to escape the humiliation and embarrassment of a deficit, a device in Treasury bookkeeping which was not looked for, and which was not available a few weeks ago, will apparently have to be resorted to. The bank-note redemption fund of about $55,000,000, which the new silver law releases, will have to be drawn on in order that the Government may escape the disgrace and discredit of insolvency. Even the most reckless and obtuse of the Republican members of Congress should begin to understand by this time that the party, in its management of the fiscal affairs of the nation, is pressing perilously close to the danger line.

There is a probability, of course, that this narrow escape from financial wreck may teach the Republican leaders in the National Legislature an important and valuable lesson. At all events, if the controlling party during the session next winter, in which the management of the affairs of the Government for the fiscal year immediately preceding the Presidential election is to be provided for, shows in the matter of appropriations the contempt for the dictates of reason and the lessons of experience displayed in the present session, disaster at the polls can hardly be averted.

Republican Opposition to Bayonets

From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin (Rep.)

Within the past few days stalwart Republican editors like Murat Halstead, thoroughly loyal Senators like Paddock of Nebraska, cautious Republican Representatives like Alfred C. Harmer, earnest Republican business men like Hamilton Disston, and Southern Republicans like Ewart of North Carolina, together with not less than a score of Republican daily journals, have raised their voices against this bill; and their protests, now that Southern Republicans themselves declare publicly in mass meeting that they do not want it, cannot fail to be heeded by the Senate.

A Painful Lack of Delicacy.

From the Chicago Tribune (Rep.).

Either Pension Commissioner Raum should resign or his Ex-John should go out of the pension business. There ought to be sufficient sense of the proprieties of life in the family to force one of them to quit.

RAIDING CHICAGO POOL-ROOMS.

A Double-Dealing Justice of the Peace and His Fees.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 29.—Ed. Corrigan, proprietor of the West Side Racing Park, has been making war on the down-town pool-rooms under the State law, which forbids the selling of pools outside of racing inclosures. A number of raids have been made on the city pool-rooms, with the result that in each instance A constable has appeared on the scene with a replevin writ, by virtue of which he has taken possession of the pooling machines.

A curious thing developed in that connection. The justice of the peace whom Corrigan employed to issue the writs of seizure also issued the writs of replevin, thereby practically nullifying the former. This justice lives several miles from the scene of the raids, and the promptness with which the replevin writs were issued set Corrigan to the making of an investigation.

He claims to have discovered that the magistrate, Justice Julian, is in the pay of the pool-room men; that he remains where he can be conveniently found at all hours of the night for the issue of replevin writs, and that he receives $25 per day for this service. It is also charged that another magistrate receives $20 per day to remain on call during the daytime. Corrigan says he proposes to see whether there is any law by which Julian can be punished for this double dealing.

TWO SIDES TO A STORY.

Husband and Wife Prove Their Marriage a Failure.

BOSTON, July 29.—By the story which young Mrs. Charles S. Andrews tells Judge McKim of the Probate Court, her husband is placed in a bad light, and, on the other hand, Mr. Andrews would have the court believe that his better half is not so good as she should be.

Andrews is a son of Charles H. Andrews, late of the Herald, and Mrs. Andrews was Kate Henshaw Jackson, daughter of Dr. Jackson, for many years Medical Director of the United States Navy, now on the retired list. The two were married in 1887. The bridegroom's father gave the young man $200,000 and a $15,000 house on Commonwealth avenue. To day the mercy is gone, the young man is $34,000 in debt and the wife is suing for separate maintenance. She alleges that her husband is extravagantly jealous, is the habit of becoming intoxicated and frequently makes himself very obnoxious to her and her friends; that he has threatened to shoot her, and that she is afraid of her life.

Mr. Andrews, by way of rejoinder, says he never drank except when his wife joined him; that she frequently became intoxicated, and that she has abused him shamefully. On one occasion she threw a pair of scissors at him and wounded him on the head. He makes other charges and says that on one occasion he saw her reach up and take a cigarette from a young man's pocket.

It is the impression that the judge will leave the young couple as he found them.

COSSIP DROVE HER TO DEATH.

An Innocent Young Girl the Victim of Base Scandal-Mongers.

PHILLIPSBURG, N. J., July 29.—The body of Mary M. Bullman, a really pretty girl of respectable parentage, was buried yesterday. She was a victim of rude gossip. Innocent of the ways of the wicked world, she met a young man one evening and received a gift of money from him. Innocently the girl on the following day spoke of the gift in the presence of one or two of the girls employed in the factory in which she was at work.

The story was carried to other parts of the mill, until it was finally converted into a scandal.

It reached the ears of the poor girl, and it so shocked her that her mind became disturbed and she was sent to the asylum at Morris Plains. There she remained until her death—a victim of the work of scandal mongers. There was no wrong connected with the meeting of the couple, and the money was given without any evil intentions. Among the first to call to view the remains were two girls who were instrumental in spreading the false reports.

Gifts to the Queen.

From the Hartford Courant.

Walt Whitman, on the occasion of Victoria's recent birthday, sent her a sprig of arbutus and a poem. We wonder whether Her Majesty will return this offering with an official declination to receive presents from foreigners. We know of several American girls, some years ago, who, in making a tour through California and the Pacific coast, gathered a valuable collection of wild flowers indigenous to that region, and having carefully pressed them, sent them in a beautiful volume to the Queen of Great Britain and Empress of the Indies. The gift was at once returned, with an official communication that such offerings were not received by that sovereign except from her own subjects, and even in that case discretion was used in their acceptance.

The Field Marshal for Peace.

Moltke Historian's Letter.

I prefer the ways and means of peace in dealing with the Southern question, which is the race question, because I believe they will prevail—as indeed they have done in the most critical political contest in twenty years, that of 1888. The difficulties that are so dangerous will be overcome by the wholesome growth of the country.

INCENDIARIES DESTROY A TOWN.

A Series of Fires Practically Wipe Out an Ohio Village.

FOSTORIA, July 29.—The village of Bairdstown, ten miles west of here, has been almost wiped out by incendiaries. At 1 o'clock on the morning of July 8, the saloon of William Hurst was fired from the outside, burning his residence adjoining, and a double brick block belonging to the Dewey Store Company on the opposite side of the street.

Hurst purchased a brick building on the opposite side of the street, occupied as a drug store, for his saloon, and on July 19 this building was fired from the outside, burning it to the ground.

Sunday morning fire broke out in a frame ware-room, back of Stahl's store, and burned out Briggs & Jones' general store on one side and a grocery store on the other. Three families lived upstair, some of whom were compelled to flee in their night clothes.

At 6 o'clock yesterday morning fire broke out in the frame house in the rear of the site of the brick building belonging to the Keene estate of Toledo, and burned five barns with most of their contents. The fire is supposed to have started from the other fire having smouldered yesterday and last night. The lost on buildings in all of the fires is estimated at $25,000 and stock about $10,000. No clew to the identity of the incendiaries has been found.

COULD NOT QUIT THEIR SEATS.

New Varnish on the Pews Holds an Iowa Congregation

FORT DODGE, IA., July 29.—When the contribution plate was passed at the dedication services of the new Congregational Church at Moorland Sunday not a single person arose to leave his seat. One reason was because the varnish on the seats was not sufficiently dried, and the entire congregation found itself tightly glued down. At the close of the service it took three-quarters of an hour to free all the prisoners. The handsome toilets of the ladies were ruined, and large portions of them will decorate the newly-painted pews.

Weak and Weary

In early summer the warmer weather is especially weakening and enervating and that tired feeling prevails everywhere. The great benefit which people at this season derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla proves that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting factitious strength, but Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up in a perfectly natural way all the weakened parts and purifies the blood.

Worn Out

"Hood's Sarsaparilla restored me to good health. Indeed, I might say truthfully it saved my life. To one feeling tired and worn out I would earnestly recommend a trial of Hood's Sarsaparilla."—Mrs. Purser A. Mosmer, 90 Brooks st., East Boston, Mass.

N. B.—If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to buy any other.

Princess Rosetta and the Pop Corn Man,

With six pictures by Garrett, is MARY E. WILKINS' delicately humorous contribution to the (August)

Midsummer WIDE AWAKE

(20c., everywhere).

Grant Allen has a popular scientific paper about "The American Water Lily," followed by "The Queen Lily," by Miss Harris, and that by a legendary poem, "Water Lilies," by Frances L. Mace. The Amateur Photography article has some very curious and beautiful pictures. Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont's will-and-way story, is notable and notably told. There are interesting installments of the serials, "The New Senior at Andover" and "The Quest of the Whipping Boy." Louise Stockton has a singularly suggestive "Game of the Senses" for young and old. And there are 80 Pages of Vacation Delights.

The Hat of the Postmaster,
