WEEDING OUT GALIC TITLES.

French Republic Defines Its Attitude Toward Nobiliary Honors.

France's government, for the first time since the institution of the title 220 years ago, has defined the conditions under which nobility should be established or terminated. The Ministry of the Interior, in a decree of January 1906, has decided that the right to bear the title of nobility shall be restricted to those whose ancestors have held the title for at least 50 years. The decree also prohibits the hereditarily transferable of the title of nobility.

This decree is a step towards the elimination of the title of nobility, which has been a source of criticism in France. The government has been under pressure to abolish the title of nobility, which is considered an anachronism in a modern society.

The decree has been welcomed by some, who see it as a step towards modernization, but criticized by others, who see it as a loss of tradition and culture.

THE COUNTRY EDITOR.

The Whole Hat Is a Happy One.

Mr. Charles W. White.

Climbing, building, improving, etc., etc., etc., are all required for the completion of a successful experiment. But if one does not stop here, but goes on with the experiment until the thing is done properly, it is only a success for the experiment, but not a success for the whole. And this is true in every case.

In the case of our country, we have had a great deal of success in building, climbing, etc., but we have not had much success in doing the experiment right.

The government has been working hard to produce a success, but it has not succeeded in doing so. The country is in a state of confusion, and the government is not able to do much.
