

Watkins Trial Continues Here

The Federal Court trial of John T. Watkins, labor union organizer, charged with refusing to tell a congressional subcommittee facts about persons who bolted the Communist Party, continued today before Judge Joseph C. McGarraghy.

Watkins, a CIO United Auto Workers official of Rock Island, Ill., is being tried on a seven-count indictment for refusing to answer pertinent questions before a House Un-American activities subcommittee in April, 1954.

During committee hearings, Watkins testified he had never been a Communist Party member but that he had been very close to the party. He said that he would testify regarding his own relations with the party and with regard to present party members he may know.

However, he took the position the committee had no right to attempt to force him to testify about persons who have left the Communist Party. He declared it is not relevant to the work of the committee to try to expose such persons.

Yesterday in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, Assistant United States Attorney William Hitz rested the Government's contempt case against Watkins, after Robert L. Kunzig, formerly counsel for the Un-American Activities Committee, finished testifying against Watkins.

Watkins' side of the case was to be argued today by Defense Attorney Sidney Sachs.
