$24,000,000 WOTE FOR LIQUOR LAWS

Senate Gives Broad Powers as Apparent Rift Splits Dry Leaders.

By the Associated Press.

Twenty-four million dollars has been voted by the Senate to help enforce prohibition. The President would direct the expenditure of the money and in addition he would have at his disposal $250,000 to make an investigation of prohibition generally.

The story of voting of the $24,000,000 yesterday included the usual clashes between wets and dries in the Senate and off stage, apparent disagreement between leaders of dry organizations and added to this was Secretary Mellon's opposition to the proposal.

In the course of the Senate debate, Senator Bruce of Maryland, a wet, made the statement that the Apostle Paul gave his approval of liquor for medicinal purposes.

Challenges Heelin. "Whisky can be bought by any Senator for such a purpose," observed Senator Heelin, of Alabama, a dry.

"How does the Senator know that?" was Bruce's counter. The Senator from Maryland chuckled over his sally and so did some of the others.

Senator Bruce while he voted against the increase yesterday may have been in a measure responsible for it. While an appropriation bill was being considered some time ago, he put an amendment that would add $250,000,000 for liquor enforcement.

The Senate was napping and the amendment went through, later to be removed in conference. The wets regarded it as a good joke, but the dries said they believed more money was needed to help dry up the country.

While the first deficiency bill was being considered, the Harris amendment that $25,000,000 be added for prohibition enforcement. The $24,000,000 voted yesterday was the outcome of this, the roll call being 50 for and 27 against the proposal.

Gives Broad Powers. The President was given broad powers for the disposal of the $24,000,000. He must distribute it to Government departments concerned with prohibition enforcement, but he may spend all, or only a part of it, as he sees fit. The money would be available until June 30, 1930.

Even after the $24,000,000 had been added to the deficiency bill, dry leaders continued to issue statements about the difference of opinion that had arisen among them regarding it.

F. Scott McBride, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, denied that friction existed in Anti-Saloon League circles over the appropriation. Mr. McBride had approved Secretary Mellon's stand against the Harris amendment.

Earlier in the day, however, Dr. A. H. Briggs, superintendent of the California Anti-Saloon League, had declared in a statement that the Anti-Saloon League was "tempting the impossible" in trying to carry the work of legislative representative. Dr. Briggs took issue with Secretary Mellon's stand.

On a statement that the Anti-Saloon League was "tempting the impossible" in trying to carry the work of legislative representative. Dr. Briggs took issue with Secretary Mellon's stand.

Charges Neglect of Business. Dr. Briggs suggested that Edwin C. Dinwiddie of Washington, who preceded the late Wayne B. Wheeler, and Mr. McBride as legislative representative would make a good man for that post, saying that the league's business at the Capitol was neglected.

McBride in saying there was no friction in the ranks, said: "Several men have been misquoted, I am sure." He asserted that he regarded Dr. Briggs as one of his best friends, and laughed at the suggestion that Mr. Dinwiddie would be named to the post. Mr. McBride indicated that he expected to remain both as superintendent and legislative representative.

The superintendent's views that there was no controversy in Anti-Saloon League ranks were similar to those of Dr. Arthur J. Barton, chairman of the national executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League.

Dr. Barton said that the "apparent difference in judgment was not strange among men of strong personalities and convictions." He said he did not think there was any "row."

Previously three prominent dry leaders, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., Eugene L. Crawford, secretary of the Board of Temperance and Social Service in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and Bishop Thomas Nicholson, president of the Anti-Saloon League, had urged Secretary Mellon to reconsider his attitude on the Harris amendment.

Mr. McBride at first said he favored the proposal for additional funds for enforcement, but he changed his stand after Secretary Mellon made his views known.

Dry Rift Denied. The board of temperance, prohibition and public morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church today amplified its previous expression of opinion that the prohibition unit could not use $25,000,000 wisely at the present time, in a statement which dealt with reported conflict within dry organizations.

"It seems in the present instance there is an appearance of conflict of opinion where fundamentally there is no difference," the statement said. Expressing the opinion that the policy of all temperance organizations was "to put entire confidence in Mr. Hoover, a prohibitionist elected by the prohibitionists of the country," the statement continued:

"Mr. Hoover's policy, which we presume will be based upon the investigation which he indicates will be made, must perhaps be allowed to develop before the exact size of large additional appropriations can wisely be determined. In the meantime provisions by Congress of additional funds for specific purposes is desirable, but it is hardly probable that such appropriations will aggregate $25,000,000 until they can be based upon a thorough understanding of the needs of the various agencies being used by the Government in enforcement."

WEARINESS OF HOOVER AFTER CAMPAIGN DROPS LIKE A MASK AFTER BATTLESHIP COMES TO HALT OFF CAPE SAN LUCAS AND PRESIDENT-ELECT LANDS TWO FISH—"BIGGEST ONE GOT AWAY"

Ambassador Fletcher and John Griffin Mott Are Personal Advisers.

EASY FOR HIM TO RELAX

Piscatorial History Written When Vessel Anchors for Recreational Whim.

Note—Greater light and clearer perspective on Herbert Hoover's trip to South America, in which untold diplomatic advantages were recorded for the United States, are to be gained from the interesting story written by Rex Collier, The Star's own representative of the trip, which began January 20. The story, with all its intimate details, will continue in The Star until completed.

BY REX COLLIER.

WELL out on the tossing, sun-splashed Pacific, President-elect Hoover, who settled himself comfortably in a steamer chair under the shadow of a huge seaplane catapult and radiated complete contentment.

He had reason to be contented. The good ship Maryland was cleaving steadily southward under perfect skies toward the Central American coast. His tentative itinerary had been shaped up and everything augured well for the success of his novel adventure.

Hoover mused upon the personnel of the party he had gathered around him to share in that adventure, and was pleased. His successes of the past had been achieved with the help of loyal, efficient organizations. Never had he been favored with an organization more rounded in its gifts of good will.

He had spent most of the day in conference with Ambassador Fletcher, working out an itinerary. He had learned enough about that country's attainments and personality during the few hours already spent with him to know that in the former envoy to Chile he had an invaluable aide.

Held in High Esteem.

Fletcher had left his post at Rome to take part in the Pan-American Conference here in December, and his presence in Washington was a happy coincidence not to be overlooked by the State Department. An outstanding authority on Latin America and a diplomat held in the highest esteem by the republics to the south, he was the logical choice of President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg for the important assignment with Hoover. Above all, the Ambassador was a gentleman with an engaging personality and a smile that wins friends.

Then there was John Griffin Mott, Los Angeles friend of the Hoover family, Latin American expert, fluent Spanish speaker and noted after-dinner speaker. He had forsaken pressing business connections to comply with the request of his old friend from Palo Alto that he accompany the latter as a personal adviser. Hoover knew that John Mott's counsel would be a real asset.

The Navy Department had assigned as his aide, Comdr. A. Toutant Beauregard, an amiable officer of distinction.

Benn of the Department of Geology.

President-elect Hoover and Ambassador Fletcher taking life easy on the Maryland, en route to Honduras.

guished Southern forbears, and regarded as the Navy's foremost student of Latin American affairs. As no foreign adviser the department had sent, also, Lieut. Comdr. H. C. Train, a member of the Navy general board.

Hoover had the utmost confidence, of course, in his own personal staff. George E. Akerson, his secretary and personal assistant, had proved his worth during the stress of the political campaign. George Barr Baker, a long-time friend and confidante, was an indispensable aide. Other valuable members of the staff were William P. McEvoy, former newspaper man, who would serve as liaison officer with the press, and Frank Kay, youthful stenographer. Nor should Costa Boris, valet and factotum, be left out of the list.

Miss Fesler as Companion. As for Mrs. Hoover, she had a most capable staff in the person of her secretary, Miss Ruth Fesler, attractive graduate of Stanford University, the alma mater of both Mr. and Mrs. Hoover. Miss Fesler would be more than a secretary—she would be a most congenial companion on the long voyage.

Hoover was satisfied that his good-will party was well equipped to carry out the arduous program he had mapped out for it. The assurance tended to induce a peaceful state of mind and a feeling of snug restfulness. He was free from worries.

Now, a "Hooverism" familiar to friends of the President-elect is his ability to close his desk light-heartedly when the day's problems are cleared away and relax as completely as though he had not a burden in the world.

This happy faculty is the marvel of his friends. It is a trait that enables him to keep his mind refreshed and his body vigorous for the tasks that lie ahead.

Hoover's favorite diversion is fishing. As he sat there on deck and watched the schools of porpoises cavorting and flying fish skimming like silvery darts over the waves, he found his thoughts gravitating toward matters far removed from diplomacy.

He strove to put the lighter thoughts out of his head. He was on a battleship, en route to foreign lands on a very serious mission. Fishing had no part in the program, it seemed.

Find Cape San Lucas. There was something familiar about the sound of that name. Unless the memory of the former Secretary of Commerce failed him, it and seldom does, an expedition from the Bureau of Fisheries had caught a 700-pound marlin off Cape San Lucas about a year ago.

"They did it with a line no thicker than a butcher's string," Hoover informed his friends, with enthusiasm. "And it required 14 hours to land him!"

It was the last straw. There was no escaping the urge. A fishing he must go off Cape San Lucas. Hoover asked the captain about it and that officer, ever ready to please the distinguished guest, agreed it could be done. The ship could be speeded up to 17 knots so that no delay would result in the schedule. Orders were issued accordingly.

Just to Fish. That Cape San Lucas fishing expedition stands out as the most remarkable in piscatorial history. Never before had a 30,000-ton battleship anchored its course and come to anchor for the sole purpose of permitting one of its passengers to indulge in a recreational whim.

The Maryland arrived off the lonely jagged tip of the Mexican cape early in the afternoon of November 22. Three small motorboats were put over the side. Into one of them climbed the President-elect and Mark Sullivan, one of the veteran anglers of the press contingent. Several rods and lines were put on board. Into the second boat went Akerson and two more newspaper men rated as fishing experts—Phil Kinsley and Ned McIntosh. The third boat was for the secret service men—for they must keep on the trail of "the chief," even though he were engaged in so harmless a pastime as that made famous by Isaac Walton.

The boats swished away and sought out a likely looking spot a few hundred yards off the bleak shoreline. Hoover waited the opinion that somewhere in the vicinity he would cut across the path used by the finny inhabitants of the deep in journeying back and forth between the Gulf of California and the Pacific Ocean.

Hoover Lands Dolphin. Using a spinner he had bought in San Francisco, he tried his luck at several points before he decided to change his bait. He substituted a silver minnow for the spinner. It was just what a hungry dolphin down there near the boat had been looking for. After a battle of less than 15 minutes the President-elect landed his first catch. Much elated, he tried again and before long had hooked another victim, this time a big mackerel. On the third try the Hoover and Sullivan lines made strikes simultaneously and then became entangled. The Hoover line broke, but Sullivan reeled in a yard-long dolphin.

By this time the orange sun was sinking below the gold-mottled Pacific and it was agreed, somewhat reluctantly on Hoover's part, to call it a day. The other boats were given the signal to return to the ship. Akerson and McIntosh had just succeeded in landing a pair of bonitos, so there were no regrets.

SCHOOL SURVEY DENIED. Special Dispatch to The Star. LYNCHBURG, Va., January 23.—Following an appeal from a committee of women representing community leagues and parent-teacher associations, asking for a survey of the public schools of the city, the school board has decided to decline the request for such a survey. The committee was composed of Mrs. W. D. Mount, Mrs. T. N. Davis, Jr., Mrs. Charles R. Oberfell and Mrs. Dexter O'Connell.

The school board has accepted a gift of the collection of Indian and Oriental curios which was collected by the late Layman Carroll. Just what disposition will be made of the collection for its future display has not been announced as yet.

Will Rogers Says: NEW YORK CITY.—Only got one distinction. I was the original Morrow-for-Secretary-of-State man. It will be offered to him. Hope he takes it. He is a great fellow. ## STATE SENATOR GOT RUM CASH, MAN SAYS

South Carolina Deputy Avers Dennis Received $225 After Sale of 100 Gallons.

By the Associated Press.

CHARLESTON, S. C., January 23.—The Government continued its efforts to prove that Senator E. J. Dennis and his six co-defendants are guilty of violation of the national prohibition act, for which they are now on trial here.

Following sensational evidence presented yesterday, the State began to introduce its 20 or more witnesses through which it hopes to build up its chain of evidence against the defendants. The case is expected to continue on into next week.

After Judge Ernest P. Cochran exploded a bomb yesterday by informing Attorney John McEvers, special United States attorney, that unless the Government connected its testimony with Senator Dennis more directly he would call the whole case irrelevant, the prosecution produced its star witness, C. L. Woodward, deputy sheriff of Berkeley County, who testified he had delivered 100 gallons of seized whisky to a man to be sold, on instructions of Senator Dennis, and delivered the proceeds, $225, to the Senator in person.
