SUFFRAGISTS IN 'MOVIES'

'Talking Pictures' To Be Shown at Colonial Theatre.

If it's disconcerting to see yourself as others see you, what must it be to hear yourself as others hear you? But Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw, Mrs. Harriet May Mills, Miss Elizabeth Freeman, Mrs. Raymond Brown, Mrs. W. Holden Weeks and several other suffragists will have an opportunity of doing both on Monday night at the Colonial Theatre...

The Woman About Town

WEEDS, WILDS AND WILES.—The only other passenger besides the woman in the car out in the wilds of Brooklyn was a lady in deep mourning. She was carrying a wooden box and seemed in great distress and finally began to weep. "Maybe her husband has just died," thought the woman, who asked if she could be of any assistance. "Oh, no," was the answer. "But maybe to talk will make me forget. I've had such a terrible loss." "You were very fond of him, I suppose." "Not fond! I loved him as I shall never love another! I saw him killed by an auto while I sat on the porch. And I had just bought him a new collar! No, not my husband! I could easily get another husband, but never another Sniff. Poor doggie, and he came all the way from China. I'm going to bury him in Jamaica, my poor!" But the woman let the weeping willow have the car and Sniff all to herself.

OUR GOOD FRIENDS.—We were asked, nay, coaxed and begged, to "make a funny speech" before a club on West End avenue. Being good-natured, and after being coaxed to the right point, we consented. Before leaving for the club we "practised the speech" before our suffering relatives. "Don't forget to stand on your toes," said our husband. "Be sure to hold up your chest," warned our sister. "Get your lungs full of air and you won't be jerky," advised our best friend. "Stand a'!" — But if we tried to remember all the rules we'd forget the speech. So, after allowing the kind ones to clear our throat with the white of an egg, the juice of an orange and a lemon and some glycerine, we left for the fray, feeling more like taking carbolic than anything else.

SELPHISH USEFULNESS.—She was a poorly dressed, prematurely aged woman, with "toil" plainly stamped all over her. As we sat together in a restaurant a conversation sprang up. Her heart was lighter with the sting of an "ungrateful daughter." "I never would let her sell her hands 'n' slaved to bring her up like a laddy, an' what thanks do I get? None! She can't even earn her own bread and butter." Poor daughter! Poor mother! The case of the "ungrateful daughter" should be studied from many viewpoints. When she was brought up to be a "lady" and then instead of being allowed to live as a lady's life has to hustle for a living, is she so very wrong in being ungrateful for such a poor equipment?
