STOCK MARKET REVIEW After Early Irregularity Active Support Results in Gains.

An element of doubt was in evidence during the early trading yesterday morning regarding the trend of stock market prices.

The improvement was attributed to the aggressive policy of the professionals, but in connection with this speculative support during the week there has been some outside participation.

Third Avenue continued its upward rise, which had been progressing during the last few days, and both the stock and adjustment bonds were notably strong and active.

There was sufficient material for discussion in the events of the day, including affairs in Washington affecting the tariff and currency measures and the acute situation in Mexico.

The local money situation presented few changes, except in some increase in transactions by out-of-town institutions and local trust companies.
