A BOY WHO HELPED MAKE HISTORY at SANTIAGO

The Pen Picture of the Crushing of Cervera and of Preceding Incidents, Which This Young Midshipman Sketches on the Spot, Brings Out Tragedy and Comedy in High Relief.

SCENE AT TAMPA WHEN THE ARMY EMBARKED FOR SANTIAGO

SPECIAL FEATURE SECTION

PART V. EIGHT PAGES.

NEW-YORK, SUNDAY, MARCH 20, 1916

A boat which, when a "whale" of an American in 1898 chased a number of the crew, was saved in the battle of the cruiser in the West Indies, is seen from above, showing the manner in which its crew handled the boat during the battle.

By Louis C. F. Scott-Mason.

Thursday and Friday, March 20, 21.

The opportunity to see the cruiser on the coast of Cuba, as described by the lad who was there, is a rare one.

On board the Indiana with Thomas West.

We had an opportunity to visit the Indiana on the coast of Cuba, and there were few places where a lad could have seen as much of the ship as he did.

Disembarking from the Transports.

The troops came in this morning and disembarked on board the Indiana, which was taken to the station.

Jolly weather notes in the dynamo room.

I was very busy today, but we got some work done.

The troops are on board, and I am going to take a trip on the Indiana.

Ready for action on the Indiana.

We have a great advantage over the rest of the fleet, as we have never been in the same ship before, and I am going to take a trip on the Indiana.

The troops are on board, and I am going to take a trip on the Indiana.