LANDSLIDE KILLS 15,000 IN ASIA; TOWN WIPED OUT

Avalanche Follows Recent Earthquakes Felt Around the Globe—Governor and Mother Only Ones to Escape.

TASHKEND, Russia, Oct. 29—A landslide has swept away the whole town of Karabagh, in Bokhara, burying the entire population of 15,000.

The vast slide started by the earth shocks. After hanging over the city for days, it started so suddenly that the inhabitants had no time for flight.

The governor and his mother are the only ones who are positively known to have escaped. It is conjectured that others in suburbs at some distance from the mountains also survived, but no news has been received from them.

The landslide followed the recent earthquake. The shocks occurred October 29 and 21, and did great damage.

So far as known, however, only two persons were killed at that time. The victims were struck by falling missiles. Most of the people fled to the open country, but afterward returned to their homes.

PREVIOUS SHOCKS RECORDED

Karabagh was situated 50 miles southwest of Samarkand, in Bokhara, where another earthquake occurred October 27.

The disturbances were recorded by earthquake wireless stations in Washington. They were believed to have originated in the northern Indian ocean, at a point west of Australia.

Disasters were received the same day from St. Petersburg reporting earthquakes in the Leningrad, Shakhod, and other places.

Kareelagh is in a seismically active country.
