

PLAGUE TO GRIP CITY NEXT YEAR, SAY EXPERTS

Health Heads to Lay in Reserve Serum to Meet Summer of 1917.

APPEAL FOR BLOOD BRINGS GOOD SUPPLY

Epidemic Crisis Will Be Passed by September 15, Is Prediction.

An increase of three in the number of new cases of infantile paralysis and an increase of five in the number of deaths were shown in the report of the Department of Health yesterday as compared with Monday's figures.

Another epidemic of infantile paralysis, although not of such proportions as the one which has been sweeping through greater New York since the middle of June, is expected during the summer of 1917 by Dr. John S. Billings, Deputy Commissioner of Health.

Plans for Next Year's Combat.

The Department of Health has already begun laying plans to combat the plague next year. These plans, most of them providing for preventive work, will be elaborated by the Medical Advisory Board of the Health Department, which will meet in about three months to devise means of handling the sporadic cases which appear during practically every month of the year, and to prevent, if possible, another outbreak.

Knowledge gained by physicians of the department and by private practitioners and bacteriologists will prove of incalculable value in fighting another outbreak.

up of children under twelve years instead of sixteen.

It is also understood that the department intends to continue its campaign for immune blood serum all winter, in order to obtain a large reserve quantity.

Response to the appeals of the department for blood has been much larger in the last few days.

BLAKELOCK AT WORK IN HIS NEW STUDIO.

The artist photographed yesterday after his return from the Middletown State Hospital for the Insane, where he had been confined for seventeen years.

here on through Maywood and past the quiet old houses of Hackensack. It was only a few minutes then before it entered the grounds of the sanatorium, which is nearer Teaneck than West Englewood.

The faces of Blake Lock's friends were slightly drawn as they led the way to the pleasant brick dormitory where his room was. This was to be a test even more severe than the long ride that had preceded it. They threw open the door and let him enter first.

For a moment he halted, swaying slightly. About the walls of the sunny room were portraits of artists whom he had known before the shadow fell upon him. In their midst was a little water color, simply framed, a winter landscape painted by Blake Lock in the days of his poverty, one of the many that no one then would buy.

It had been found among his belongings by his wife and kept when Blake Lock pictures were bringing fabulous prices.

Slowly Blake Lock entered the room and slowly he inspected it, wall by wall, hesitating long before each of the faces that smiled down upon him.

He knew them all, even those of friends he had not seen for seventeen years. He peered closely at each one, and his eyes shone as he noted the signature in the corner. Every portrait had been painted by the subject.

Henhouse for Studio.

Still there was more to show him—and the sun was sinking. Silent with the quietude of great happenings, Blake Lock followed his guides to a long, low wooden structure southeast of the dormitory.

It had been a henhouse, but loving and careful hands had transformed it. There was a skylight, the windows had been broadened, white curtains shook in the breeze, and the entire building had been renovated and garbed as if for a bride. It is there that Blake Lock is to work, and his friends believe, win back his beloved mistress. It is to be his studio.

The painter entered and went straight to an easel with canvas stretched that was in the center of the room. His fingers curled with the old craft about the brushes that were strewn around.

"Play us something," said Mrs. Adams.

A baby grand piano in perfect condition stood in one corner. Blake Lock approached it somewhat timidly and did not wonder that the stool was properly adjusted.

Becomes Lost in Music.

"I don't know," he said, "it is so long—the instrument at Middletown was not of the best."

But he was seated even as he spoke, and his fingers strayed over the keys. At first the melody was halting. The player's fingers unconsciously tried to dodge the keys that had been missing or marred on the only piano he had seen in the last seventeen years.

Serenity can overcome most difficulties, however, and the player soon became lost in his music. While the messenger sent from the main house to announce that dinner was ready stood gazing in the door, the transformed henhouse quivered to the joys of rhapsodies conceived by an artist. The melodic glow of the sunset was fading in the room before Blake Lock's eyes.

At dinner he met the other inmates of the sanatorium, eighteen of them, and his mother, Mrs. Adams.

DANCING 'COUNT' HELD IN VICE RAID

HE CALLS ON POLICE DEPUTY TO AID HIM

District Attorney Says the Prisoner Has Revealed Important Secrets.

An early morning vice raid, conducted by Assistant District Attorney Smith, on a house in Seventh avenue, just below Central Park, yesterday resulted in the arrest of the "marquis" Rodolpho Guglielmi, a well known dancer in Broadway circles.

On his arrival at the District Attorney's office the "marquis" asked permission to communicate with a friend over the telephone.

The Seventh Avenue place is on the east side of the avenue, between Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth streets, near Carnegie Hall, and about one avenue block distant from the New York Athletic Club, and according to Assistant District Attorney Smith, is one of a number of places where blackmail has been practised on wealthy New Yorkers.

"This man has confessed that he is a bogus count or marquis and he has made statements which, if true, are of immense importance in this investigation," said District Attorney Swann.

FIFTH AVENUE HOLD-UP NETS HIGHWAYMEN $5

Police in Commandeered Car Arrest Two After Chase.

Two highwaymen jumped from an automobile at Sixtieth Street and Fifth Avenue early yesterday and while one of them plied the arms of Thomas Redmond, a waiter in the New York Athletic Club, the other went through his pockets.

Jumping into another automobile, the policemen gave chase. Shooting through the almost deserted streets at a breakneck pace and firing several shots at the fugitives, the pursuers finally overhauled the car at Thirty-eighth Street and Madison Avenue.

Private Garages that take in the Public

This spidery looking gentleman awaiting your eagerly expected visit is Mr. Otto Owner-Dealer, a business man of rather doubtful repute and numerous aliases.

Here is his "private garage," containing several of his "own" cars, which he has been "forced to sell." Just between ourselves, if you have some junk on wheels for sale at a reasonable price he'll feel forced to buy, too.
