War Clouds Hide Centenary Of Famous Old Erie Canal

Act of Assembly Providing Fund for Great Waterway Passed on April 17, 1817—Opened Door Between Atlantic States and Immense Interior

These tremendous obstacles had to be overcome in realizing the project. Part of the canal had to be blasted through solid rock. It had to be carried across several streams by stone aqueducts...

National expositions have been held in celebration of centennials of less important events than the construction of the narrow ditch extending from Albany to Buffalo...

The old waterway boasts an aristocratic lineage, as proud as that of the country. For it was no less person than George Washington that conceived it...

According to figures dug up from old records by State Controller Eugene M. Travis, who is also commissioner of the canal fund...

When the great problem of mobilizing the nation's resources is before us the use of this great waterway will be demonstrated to our allies...

CUTTING—At a special meeting of the Directors of The Philharmonic Society, held April 19, 1917, it was resolved that the Board of Directors of The Philharmonic Society of New York record their profound regret at the sudden death of their associate, James De Wolf Cutting. For four years a devoted Trustee and Director, for more than three years Assistant Treasurer and a life-long supporter of the Orchestra, Mr. Cutting brought to its service an enthusiasm for the ideal and standards of the Orchestra, which were of lasting service. Ever ready to give of his time, he shared his pains to aid the Orchestra. His place will be missed, but his loyalty and interest can not readily be equalled. The Board regrets that this record shall be placed upon its minutes and be given due publicity in the Press.
