TWO HUNDRED AND SIX COLUMNS GAIN
That is the advertising record of The Washington Times for last week as compared with the corresponding week of a year ago—a gain made all the more significant since it nearly doubles the amount of advertising carried.

Here Are the Figures:
Advertising Carried Last Week........ 463 Cols.
The Corresponding Week in 1908........ 257 Cols.
Gain...................................... 206 Cols.

The present surplus of the paper's value is the confidence placed in it by its advertisers. That those two hundred and six columns of advertising, which nearly double the expenditure in one paper in a year's time is the strongest tribute that could be paid to the polling power of The Washington Times.

"Advertising that pays grows. Advertising that grows pays."
