Armenian Martyrs

A grand story of martyrdom come from Turkey. The persecutions of the Armenian Christians go on a fully, since Lord Salisbury asserts we cannot interfere. A letter from Aintab, dated March 5, says:

"The general condition here is worse than at Marash. Sixty of the chief men are in prison, and more are to follow. Yesterday, from Jibni came to me in great distress. The whole village of sixty families had professed Islam under threats of torture and death. There was only one exception—that of the informant's mother, who is 110 years old, and who refused, saying: 'I am too old to deny my Lord.'"

Turks tore up and burnt her Bible. She said: "You can do that, but you cannot tear the promises out of my heart."

This is not a tale of the persecutions under Nero or Bloody Mary, but of today.—The Freeman.

The Drink Evil

Here are some of the opinions of distinguished persons on alcoholic liquors, put into small space: Stupefies and besots.—Bismark.

That beverage, the mother of sins.—Southey.

The devil in solution.—Sir Wilfred Lawson.

The evil is in the drink.—David Lewis, J. P.

Liquid fire and distilled damnation.—Robert Hall.

I consider all spirits bad spirits.—Sir Ashley Cooper.

The dynamite of modern civilization.—Hon. John D. Long.

He has paid dear, very dear, for his whistle.—Benjamin Franklin.

Every crime has its origin more or less in drinking.—Judge Gurney.

Grape juice has killed more than grape shot.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Drink is the greatest obstacle to the diffusion of education.—John Bright.

Drink is the mother of want and the nurse of crime.—Lord Brougham.

Drink is the only terrible enemy whom England has to fear.—Prince Leopold.

GOSSIP.

The sun was shining through a stained-glass window, and the colored rays fell on the wall back of the pulpit. It was all the same pure white light, but that which passed through the blue glass appeared blue, that which passed through the red glass appeared red, that which passed through the green glass appeared green. So it is with the pure acts and motives of good people passing through the minds and lips of gossipers. The impure person colors them with impurity. The dishonest person colors them with dishonesty. The untruthful person colors them with deceitfulness. Each attributes the motive which prompts himself to a similar act. When I see this green light on the wall, I do not think that sunlight is green. I think that the glass through which it passes is green. If you assign an impure motive to your neighbor's act, I do not think his motive is impure; but I think the mind through which that judgment passed is impure.—G. N.
