

PAULINE FREDERICK
in "ONE WEEK OF LIFE"
Goldwyn Pictures

COMING TO ISIS TOMORROW FOR ONE DAY ONLY

Dr. Lischkoff has returned and will resume practice.

Thomas Holding is Back With Pauline Frederick.

When Pauline Frederick comes in her new Goldwyn Picture, "One Week of Life," to the Isis theatre tomorrow, the vivid and popular star will have a leading man whose reappearance with her will be noted by followers of screen history. He is Thomas Holding, now an established favorite, but new to the silver sheet when Pauline Frederick left the stage at the height of her success to make an experimental appearance in motion pictures. That was in Hall Caine's "The Eternal City," and her subsequent rise to fame in the newer art needs no comment.

Thomas Holding, too, left a successful stage career to go with Miss Frederick to Rome and London for important scenes in the famous play, and like her he has remained on the screen ever since, adding to his reputation by playing leading roles in a score of important photoplays. Now Goldwyn executives, in response to many letters of inquiry, have returned him to the star whose first triumph he shared.

His role in "One Week of Life," is said to be one to tax the ability of any player. He is Kingsley Sherwood, master of a splendid home and husband of a beautiful and popular woman whose studied coldness and indifference have plunged him into melancholia which he tries to lessen by drink. This weakness of will is calculated to prejudice an audience, yet it is the actor's problem to retain sympathy in view of what happens later when he meets another girl. She has lent herself to an innocent deception, her striking resemblance to the latter making this possible. It is when Sherwood notices a subtle difference in the woman he believes to be his wife, and comes to love her, that the extent of Holding's art is appreciated. He must show himself to be inherently worthy of the girl in spite of outward appearances.

This is accomplished with capital effect by Holding, in whose clear-cut, mobile features Miss Frederick sees resemblance to a DuMaurier drawing.
