BREWTON PROMISES TO TALK PENSACOLA

R. J. Brewton left for Texas last evening to look after his oil interests in the Lone Star state. He will be gone about a fortnight. Before stepping on the train, he said: "I regret exceedingly my inability to remain in Pensacola until after the meeting of the centennial commission on Monday on Monday and dining with the other boosters for Texas or Pensacola."
In Texas I am going to tell them of Pensacola—the Centennial City—and if the chance the commission decides against the unanimous choice of West Florida, it will take a lot of advertising to keep the centennial-bound citizens of Texas from stopping off in Pensacola.
A hundred years ago, General Jackson thought of no other place than Pensacola when he took charge of Florida and unrolled the Stars and Stripes. A year later, Governor Duval was placed in office at Pensacola, and some years later a citizen residing on the banks of the St. Johns determined to organize a county, and after looking in the history which had been enacted at Pensacola, named the county Duval and named the county site Jacksonville. In other words, Jacksonville and Duval county followed Pensacola and it is nothing more than what they should be in the story of Texas when the centennial is considered.

ROLL CALL STARTS IN CITY MONDAY

Red Cross Booths Will Be Established in Streets.

On Monday in Pensacola the Red Cross Roll Call will be launched with booths at various sections throughout the city, in charge of Captains of teams, and members of the Woman's Committee, other teams working in the residential sections.

An enthusiastic meeting was held yesterday afternoon at the San Carlos hotel, at which the work of the committees was outlined by W. K. Hyer, chairman of the Roll Call Committee. Nearly every member of the Woman's Division was present, and gave assurance to the chairman, Mrs. J. C. Dunham, of their undivided support.
