CROSSING "THE DIVIDE"

That expression when used in the Rocky mountains always means crossing the highest ridge between the big river and the Pacific. But it is here used in allusion, not to climbing the crests and then descending, but to something we experience every summer.

We are just now crossing the divide that parts the crescendo half of summer from the diminuendo. To be sure, it is over a month since the sun was vertical over the Tropic of Cancer and we saw the longest day of the year with its more than fourteen hours of sunshine against less than ten hours of night.

The signs are faint and delicate. Sunset and twilight are upon these days a little more quickly. The mornings are somehow fresher with a faint suggestion of the coolness we know in September.

Unmercifully hot flings at us may yet be indulged in by retiring summer, but briefer and brighter they must be with less and less grip on the lengthening nights.

A tariff by any other name is still a tax. There has been no complaint of a buyers' strike from the hotel peddlers.

International rivalry isn't abolished, but it is cheaper to drill for oil than to drill soldiers.

Mr. Ford is selling more cars than ever before, and now perhaps people will shake off their lethargy.

In the matter of trimming innocent bystanders, the dogs of war have very little on the hogs of peace.

It will seem more like the road back to normalcy when it is filled with moving crops.

Man is endowed with certain inalienable rights, and he is lucky if he gets the interest on the endowment.

There are two sides to the Irish question, and the only side that concerns official America is the outside.

CRESCENT CITY NEWS.

At Colrain, Mass., they have what is called the "Colrain Crescent City Association," and on a recent date, according to a paper in that section, sent to Dr. Ford of this place, this association held its annual picnic with nearly a hundred people present.

Children's Day will be observed at the Presbyterian church next Sunday morning, when the service will open at 11 o'clock under direction of Mrs. R. T. Chafer, and to which service all the people of the place are cordially invited.

Don't envy Government employees. Washington is a very unsatisfactory place to loaf at this season of the year.
