OGDEN ESTATE SOLD TO INDIANAPOLIS MEN FOR $300,000

Miami, July 15.—The sale of the beautiful W. B. Ogden estate on the bay shore at Lemon City, a short distance outside the Miami city limits, to northern people was consummated Saturday, according to a statement made this morning by Locke T. Highleyman, president of the Fidelity Bank & Trust Co., who assisted in closing the deal. Mr. Highleyman said that only a small payment was made by the purchasers, who will decide later whether they will go through with the deal, to initial payment to operate as an option.

Although Mr. Highleyman refused to disclose the name of the purchasers they are understood to be Indianapolis people. He consideration named in the transaction is about $300,000, Mr. Highleyman said.

There are about 24 acres in the Ogden estate. The grounds around the residence are beautifully arked, and the shore is lined with coconut palms. There is also a small grove of tropical fruit trees in the estate. The residence is a large and costly one, built of native rock, and beautifully decorated on the interior. The purpose to which the place is to be put was not indicated by Mr. Highleyman.

The estate has been owned for many years by W. B. Ogden, a scion of the well-known Chicago family of that name connected with the meat packing industry, and a relative of the Armours. He has spent much money in developing it.

(From the Manufacturers' Record) Whatsoever thy hands find to do, do it with all thy might," is the divine command to all. God's call to all men is to work. The slothful man can find no word of commendation or even of palliation of his sin of idleness in all God's Book and in all His teachings to mankind.

Work out your salvation is an admonition as applicable in individual life and in material things as in spiritual.

It fits a nation's case as fully as it does an individual's. The diligent man shall stand erect in body and in soul before kings and the great ones of earth, while the slothful man, the slacker and the shirker of work shall be poor, and deservedly so.

God never blesses the idleness of the idler. It would be contrary to His nature to do so.

The man who does not work wholeheartedly, who does not work from a sense of duty to the world as well as to his individual family, is making of himself a drudge. He cannot know the joy of living until he throws his very life into his work. An old sawmaker in telling with great joy of a prize-winning saw which he had made, described the method of pressing his body against the material that made possible the fashioning of the saw, and said: "I pressed against it until I could feel my very life going into it." That is the spirit with which every man, rich or poor, must work and without that spirit no man can do his best and stand approved of his own conscience, of his fellow-man and of the Great Judge before whom we shall all eventually stand and be "judged every man according to his works."

Thomas Hardy, the eminent English novelist, has a habit of invariably wearing two waistcoats. Indeed, in a severe winter, he has been known to don as many as four, but even on the hottest summer day he sticks to his two, the outside one being generally of the old-fashioned knitted sort.
