What Bank Advertising Has Done in Chicago.

A few years ago the banks did scarcely any advertising and what they did do was confined to small, "digitized" cards which were thought to be the only thing in keeping with the straight-faced dignity of a bank's business.

At the last report, Chicago banks had $324,259,420 of savings deposits—a little better than an average of $100 per capita for the entire population of the city. The average for all Illinois is $18.77 per capita, and for the United States, $67.77.
