

"HOP," PLAIN AMERICAN

"Scoop" Just a Fancy "Boss" from Real Life — Frank Warren Hopkins, Whose Pen Name is "Hop."

Mr. Hopkins impresses one as any successful plain American would be expected to. He is not a poser, is modest, though not shy, and has a pleasant personality. Easy going, he enjoys himself when he can and optimistically looks into the future.

None of the little oddities which many artists possess belong to "Hop" as he signs his work. It is probably because of his years in many newspaper offices, where talented people are treated like humans.

"Boss" is Real Man. "Scoop" is a child of my fancy, and I made him up without going to any type of youngsters who worked on a paper, though there have been many that were worth using."

"At first many of the boys on the paper jollied him and said I was using him in the comics, and he would come to me and complain, but after the series was well started and he had been 'jollied' a good deal, he would come to me and say: 'When are you going to stop this?' and I said, 'Why I am making you famous.'"

"No, infamous," the printer would reply and shake his head and walk out."

"Hop" prefers and nearly always does his work, entirely alone, when making pencil sketches, as the pursuit of ideas for a daily series is at times strenuous, original humor and new situations being imperative in a successful comic strip, and often requiring careful and "serious" study.

In the last ten years, Hopkins has worked as a cartoonist on big papers in Chicago, St. Louis and Denver. He cartooned in the latter place for five years.

"Hop" said that he felt safe in saying that his Scoop drawings were published in every state in the Union, and that although the work may appear to be easy, it is most difficult to please editors and the public in every part of the country with the same pictures, and for that reason he must generalize to a great extent.

Nor can he mention any one particular place, because the other places to this class of work, giving up the customs of one section if overdone or satirized would cause his work to become unpopular, partisan politics, and poking fun at any particular nationality also being out of the question.

A little more than two years ago he became identified with the International Syndicate of Baltimore, still continuing, however, his connection with several Denver papers. His Scoop series proved so popular that he afterwards decided to devote his entire time to this class of work, giving up the newspaper political career end altogether.
