Chairman Adams Wants Commission to "Discuss Policy Matters in Secret."

(From Sunday's Advertiser.) Chairman Adams of the belt road commission still inclines to the "executive session" idea, and yesterday announced that in considering the question of an appeal from the recent court decision against the commission spending any of the appropriation on the Koolau road contract, he believed the members should consider their policy in secret.

SUGAR MEN HAPPY; STOCK MARKET RISES

The stock market yesterday showed much activity, with a rising tendency. The predictions of Edward Politz that the 1912 crop of sugar would command an average price of five cents has served to encourage sugar men a good deal, though there was a disposition among some of the brokers to think that Politz's figure was a bit too high.

MAUI DROUTH BREAKS

News was received from Maui yesterday of the breaking of the drouth. Rain has fallen in sufficient quantities all over Maui to break the drouth and, according to reports, there is a prospect of more. The stoppage of work at the Pelehoi lumber mill has had a local effect, in that it has interfered with the supply of wooden blocks for the Richards street wharf.

CONFLICTING TALES IN MURDER CASE

Chinaman Will Probably Be Exonerated for Killing of Oki.

The coroner's jury investigating the supposed murder of G. Oki by a Chinaman at Aiea, is to have some exciting times when it settles down to take the complete evidence. It is to have a session tonight in which it will get through with as much of its work as is possible, but may have to adjourn again, as many of the Japanese witnesses are still in the hospital from the wounds received in the fight in which Oki was killed. The Japanese and Chinese witnesses tell a story opposite in every detail. One Japanese who was stabbed, states that he was dressing in his house on one side of the railroad track and saw the light going on in the middle of the road a short ways down the track. He saw Oki stabbed and fall, and the Chinaman take the knife out of his body. He then ran down to join in and according to his story, the Chinaman took the knife out of the body again and stabbed him. As he provides entirely too many knives in the case, his story is discredited from the start. The other Japanese, however, tell materially the same story. The Chinaman, now in jail awaiting charges, states that the assault on him took place first in a hollow in the yard back of his home. His house and yard are not only on the other side of the track from the Japanese's house, but on the opposite side of a big flame which is raised above the level of the ground. After he was first assaulted, he says, he rushed into the house where he was again attacked by the Japanese. He picked up a knife and struck at his assailants and it was there, he says, that he gave Oki his death wound. The police give entire credence to his story. There were a number of other Chinese witnesses who tell it in exactly the same way as he does. There has been absolutely no communication between the prisoner and his friends as immediately after the fight he jumped out of the window and ran into the cane field for his life. He made his way directly to the manager's house and then to the deputy sheriff and gave himself up. He will undoubtedly be charged with murder by the police as a formality, but the grand jury is expected to return no bill.

CHINATOWN BUSY WITH NEW YEAR'S PREPARATIONS

One of the most picturesque of the oldtime local celebrations will pass after February 17, when the dragon which has been a familiar feature of Chinese New Years will be given the Saint George thrust and relegated to the shelf for evermore. The Chinese of Hawaii are to have their last oldtime celebration of the Chinese New Year on February 17, and in future will observe the New Year of the civilized world in accordance with the decree of President Sun Yat Sen, who has declared that the Chinese New Year shall accord with that of other nations. Before February 17 the local Chinese hope to hear that their new Republic has been recognized by the Powers. Should that act be published the Chinese of Honolulu will celebrate as they never have before. The revolutionary societies will organize a parade which for biazre orientalism and occidental convention will probably never be witnessed again in the Hawaiian Islands. The old style will be shown in the parade, but it will be tempered by the new, and the former will then give way to the latter. The United Chinese Society will meet tonight to discuss the coming New Year's celebration and may select a committee to act in parade matters with powers to act, should any news favorable to the new Republic be received. Squaring Accounts. This is the season of the year when the Chinese are squaring up accounts. Every Chinaman who owes money is collecting all that is due him so that he can cancel all his own obligations. He must be square with the world on February 15, New Year's eve, so that on the morrow he may face all his countrymen with his conscience clear. With all debts paid he will not face the possibility of bad luck for the ensuing twelvemonth. This is a rule rigidly adhered to among the Chinese whether at home or abroad. It behooves all householders who may be behind in their accounts with their Chinese cook or yardman to square up with him. If householders forget it or try to, they will be reminded of the matter before the week is over. While it may not lay heavy upon the conscience of the household, the latter may rest assured that the ghost of a dragon will sooner or later haunt the home. Change in Chinatown. Down in Chinatown a great change has taken place. The oldtime barber shops, those quaint hole-in-the-wall places of business, where queues were newly braided, scalps shaved, ears cleaned and the head groomed, are disappearing since the revolution in China commenced. In years gone by this was the season when the barber shops were gay with new trimmings, fresh paint and washbowls bright with polish. This was the time when the "barber-shop chords" were the vogue. It must have been in a Chinese barber shop that "barber-shop chord" first originated, for there the Chinese musicians went to gather, attune their instruments to the sing-song of the leader, and then split the walking with the screech of the fagotelet, the scratch of the violin, the crash of the cymbals, the barbaric deep tone of the shark-skin drum and the clatter of the sticks. But now the barber shops are no more. The revolution in China against the Manchu throne caused a revolution in the style of hairdressing. With the first advance of the rebel army came the advance of the Chinese progressives of Honolulu. They demanded shears instead of razors for head dressing. The old-style barbers were at a loss. They knew how to wield a razor upon lips, cheeks, chins and polls, but shears were an unknown instrument in barbering. Sum Pat, a kindly-faced Chinese barber, who has wielded the razor for thirty-five years in China and Honolulu, is learning the Occident way of hairdressing now. His little shop on Kekaulike street is still as popular as ever, but the old man is slow to acquire the ways of occidental barbering. Shears have been added to his equipment. The shears are still strange in his fingers and he is slowly reaching an understanding as to how the haircuts adornments of his customers shall be trimmed. His is one of the few old shops left in Chinatown. It still has its square-rigged chair and green and red painted stands and the oldtime shaving bowl. Another Oldtime. Around the corner on Hotel street close to the busy Chinese restaurants an oldtime shop has been changed. The old-style chair is still there and the oldtime basin, but on the other side of the room are three new American barber chairs, the kind that lie back and swing around on a swivel base. Beside these chairs are the former barbers of the obsolete school of barbering. They have acquired the snip-snip art and are becoming as deft in the trimming of the glossy black hair of their customers as their fellow-barbers in other sections. The tailor shops all through Chinatown are also busy turning out blouses of gay colors, with brass buttons and braid attachments, but even this style is likely to pass into the dim past along with hundreds of other ancient oddities which have been held to the present by sheer compulsion on the part of the former Manchu rulers. There are no queues today to project from round button-top caps. Baggy trousers are out of style and without baggy trousers the old-fashioned felt shoes can not be worn. Everything today is occidental, whether it be in the style of the wearing of the hair, the cut of the clothes, the fashion of all ornaments, and even the manners of thinking. No more are they to think of the Taoist, princes and empress-wearers and emperors. Their thoughts are for presidents, governors and mayors and all that appertain to a free Republic. Retain the Lanterns. There are some things, however, which are not to be dispensed with. The huge gaudy painted lanterns which away like balloons from balconies

QUIBBLE CLEARS CAPTAIN BOWERS

Court Uncertain Whether Punch-bowl Street Is in Honolulu or South America.

Because he is uncertain whether by Punchbowl street the prosecution in the case against Capt. W. L. Bowers, meant to infer that the offense of which the captain was accused was committed in Honolulu or South America, Judge Robinson yesterday ordered a directed verdict of acquittal. Captain Bowers was accused of having threatened to "perforate one McMahon, an agent of the board of health, if McMahon perforated the gutter" of the Bowers house. The case grew out of the antimosquito campaign. Bowers is one of the foes of the campaign and refused to allow McMahon to enter his grounds or to take the needed steps in clearing the place of mosquito wrigglers. He was represented by attorney E. C. Peters. Deputy Attorney General Lymer was prosecutor. Peters asked that the court direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty on four grounds. His first was "that the prosecution had failed to read any charge of complaint to the jury." The second was that the prosecution had "failed to prove the alleged offense had been committed within the jurisdiction of the court," the third, "that McMahon was not at the time an agent for the board of health," and the fourth and last was that the state "had failed to prove the guilt of the accused." This last was a little matter and thrown in for good measure. The court upheld the first two grounds and denied the last two. Lymer had erred, thought His Honor, in failing to read the charge to the jury—"one of the fundamental principles of law"—and had also "failed to prove venue. The chief witness testified that the alleged offense was committed on Punchbowl street, but neglected to state whether Punchbowl street is in Honolulu or South America." Later the court said, "there was nothing left for me to do. I had to grant the motion for a directed verdict. "This termination," said Judge Lymer, last night, "is very welcome to the prosecution. The main and only witness did not testify on the stand in accordance with his reiterated statements to me and to my secretary before the trial, and there was practically no case at all made out. I am glad it did not go to the jury with a certainty of acquittal, as it would misrepresent the public sentiment here and give men of the Bowers' stripe the impression that they can defy the board of health agents with impunity and never be convicted." Judge Lymer added, he is under the conviction that he did prove venue, as one of the usual routine questions. In the matter of rereading the charge he confesses that may not have done this as he believes that in the cases of misdemeanor such procedure is not necessary under the law.

BUSINESS MEN WILL BOOST THE FLORAL PARADE

"I am glad to state today that the Floral Parade outlook is more promising than at any previous time," said Director General Wall yesterday. "Auto owners are getting interested and I am sure we will have a big turnout of these decorated machines."

Rose Davison, who is in charge of the Island Princess section, awaits only the announcement from Kauai as to the island's selection of a princess, to complete her list. The outriders for the princesses are being selected and their mounts chosen. The princesses will all be mounted on spirited horses. As usual the princesses will wear the old style pa-u riding costume, decorated with leis.

The business houses will be generally represented in the parade, more generally than ever before. The larger houses have always been in the parades with handsome floats, but some of the smaller houses have signified their intention of going in this year.

Mrs. J. M. Dowsett, in charge of the auto section, is receiving the names of many new entrants. All auto owners whether residents of Honolulu or not are eligible. It is expected that with the many cars now here from San Francisco, New York and Chicago these cities will be represented.
