STORY OF THE BATTLE

How Woven Wire Bailey Held the Fort,
HIS COHORTS FAILED HIM

Jack-McVeigh's Attack on a Kueki Street House and Its Success.

How Woven Wire Bailey held the fort against Jack McVeigh has not yet been told. Those who saw the now famous battle on Thursday last have spread the details of it over town, but no word of it has appeared in print.

Jack McVeigh is now a Federal quarantine officer and is a man not to be trifled with. Mrs. McVeigh last month rode by a house owned by her husband on Kuakini street which had been vacant for a long time. She was astonished to see it occupied by a native family. When she told her husband he shared her astonishment and said that he had not rented it to any one.

Mrs. McVeigh had been told by the occupant that J. F. Bailey, the bicycle man, had given it to them free of charge. McVeigh informed his lawyer, Lorrin Andrews, of the mysterious deal and the latter called on Bailey.

Bailey said it was all right, for he intended to buy the house from McVeigh and that the bargain was all made. When Andrews told McVeigh this the latter grew angry. He said he had never seen Bailey about it.

Bailey explained later that Real Estate Agent Savidge had agreed to sell the house. Savidge said that he knew no more about the matter than that Bailey had made him a proposition to buy the house. No terms had been agreed on and no permission given for occupancy. Savidge said he didn't know anybody lived in the house.

Attorney Andrews says that when he told Bailey about this, Bailey agreed to withdraw. Andrews saw Bailey's attorney, T. McCants Stewart, and the latter laughed long and loud.

"Why," said Stewart, "the only way you can put out Bailey is by ejectment suit in the Circuit Court and as the calendar is crowded, it will take two years to have the suit brought or Bailey put out. McVeigh thought this was a peculiar law, and Andrews advised him to put Bailey and his friends out by force. Andrews made an arrangement to take this step on Thursday at 11 o'clock, and meeting Stewart at the Police Court early in the day, told him of it.

"I warn you," said Stewart, "that if you attempt to put out those people today by force there will be murder done. They will repel force by force, and you take your life in your hand if you go."

Andrews said that he was willing, and with McVeigh and a native as interpreter, they went at the time fixed to the Kuakini street house. They found the portcullis down, the drawbridge up and a great padlock on the front gate. Grouped in the yard were Woven Wire Bailey, a white man and two natives. McVeigh demanded admission and Bailey denied it.

The latter instructed his cohorts to spread themselves about the premises and repel the invaders. Incidentally he asked that the attacking party await his lawyer's coming. Bailey put his arms around the gate and dared them to come in.

They tried to break the lock and to force Bailey away. Finally McVeigh climbed on top of the fence to get into the yard and was shoved back by Bailey. Then the battle grew hot. McVeigh uttered some strong language and drew back his arm to hit Bailey. His lawyer and the others succeeding in holding him while Bailey shouted, "Why don't you hit me?"

Meanwhile the gate was broken open and the invaders went in. The others had retreated to the piazza, while Bailey stayed in the yard. A truce was called and the natives, agreeing to leave the house by Thursday, they were suffered to remain until then.

Bailey was left in a heroic posture beside the ash barrel.

GENERAL DEBILITY.

Verdict by Coroner's Jury in Death of Richard Brash

The inquest over the body of Richard Brash was held yesterday afternoon in the office of Deputy Sheriff Chillingworth, who acted as coroner. The jurors were S. Kubev, W. E. Bivens, A. Wagner, H. Edwards, L. Livingston and Fred Smith. Several witnesses, chiefly the owner of the tenement in which Mr. Brash died, his daughter, Dr. Pratt, Dr. Hoffmann and Walter Brash, a brother of the deceased, were examined.

Walter Brash testified that the deceased was 53 years and 6 months of age. He saw him one evening last week on Queen street as Richard was on his way to his room. Richard was asked as to his health and replied that he was feeling badly. The witness stated that he knew of no enemies of his brother's. Richard Brash had not been working to any extent for the past four years. He quit the printing business when his eyesight failed him. He did odd jobs but had no steady work.

The jury brought in a verdict of death from general debility.

HAWAIIAN SODA WORKS.

Complaint Made of Odors From Emma Street Establishment.

Complaint was made to the Board of Health yesterday against the Hawaiian Soda Works on Emma street near Beretania street by residents and property owners of the vicinity. It was said that the odor coming from the soda works was decidedly objectionable.

Executive Officer Pratt said that the owners of the works were poor people. They had put in sanitary plumbing, but the trouble was with the floor of the establishment. When the bottles were filled the liquid ran over and under the floor. This created a foul condition beneath the house, and when the trade winds blew the residents had their cause for complaint. The matter was turned over to the city sanitary officer.

Mr. Bryan has not gone so far as to hint that the full dinner pail is part of a plot to add to the workman's troubles by giving him indigestion.—Washington Star.
