

THE ONE IN A MIRROR. Before which the Metropolis bows down and makes absolute obeisance. Style is the extreme of modernness, and we all like modernness in men and women quite as much as we like antiquity in furniture and bric-a-brac.

It ranks money, for millions are common there, and berth, for the multitude is overruling the Knickerbockers, and beauty, for beauty may be vulgar.

It was style alone which audiences recognized in Langtry and made her popular. As every eye makes its own beauty, there were squabbles infinite over her, and they scoffed and jeered at her acting as at the feeble work of an amateur, but they adored her style.

A good style is simply a good general knowledge of the fitness of things. It argues a certain amount of intelligence and refinement. Genius rarely has it, because genius is only an inflammation of certain spots of the intelligence, which would develop abnormally at the expense of the mass, and anything abnormal is not good style.

When the beautiful Eugenie ceased to be the empress of the French, she laid down with her imperial crown her scepter as queen of fashion. She had carried it with the lavish splendor of one not born in the purple, who takes to luxury with all the fierceness of a cultivated appetite.

Incident in a Dissecting-Room. (Cincinnati Enquirer). "Doctor, does it not sicken the students, or do they not lose all feeling and all veneration for the dead?"
