TEACHERS' PENSIONS

The teachers' pensions, according to the present law, promise a reduction as time goes on. At present a teacher contributes one per cent of his or her salary and the territory sets aside a certain amount. If the pensions amount to more than the money provided for them, they are scaled pro rata, according to the funds available.

There are fourteen teachers on the pension roll at present. Each receives $600 per year—this amounts to $8,400 for the year.

We understand that there are approximately 175 teachers contributing to the pension fund. For figuring purposes, suppose that each teacher contributes $20 per year to the fund. This amounts to $3,500. When the act was put into operation there were quite a number who joined but it is doubtful if many have joined since. As the present contributors go on the retired list and draw out and not put in it seems probable that pensions will dwindle.

When the law was passed it was considered quite unsatisfactory but something to meet the demand and it would be improved as time went on.

As at present all teachers are given the same pension but all do not pay the same toward it. Further the teachers should have to pay more and draw a pension pro rata to what each contributes. It acts as a pension and an insurance for the teachers and the teacher must be willing to bear his or her part toward that end.
