RELIC OF THE DAYS OF KAMEHAMEHA

In the window of the Gazette company, on King street, is an old calabash, made by hand of kou, more than one hundred years ago. It is valuable because of its associations and because these oldtime poi containers are getting more rare every day. Calabashes go from father to son among the Hawaiians, and this one, which belonged to the grandmother of a very old lady, has passed through several generations to the present owner.

In the days of Liholiho, who was known also as Kamehameha II, it was tabu for men and women to sit at table at the same time. Women took secondary positions in the household and were obliged to wait until their lieges were through before they could partake of the poi and other good things provided. Influence was brought upon the king by the early missionaries to take off this tabu, and he yielded, the event being made the occasion of a great feast, which was given at Keaulou, Kona, on the Island of Hawaii, where the center of government of the Islands was established at the time.

Thousands of Hawaiians were present, but not a woman in the lot had the courage to approach the mats on which the spread was laid. Finally Kaahumanu, wife of Liholiho, walked gingerly to the place where the poi, fish and fruits were, and dipping her finger into a calabash of poi, began eating. Then she helped Liholiho to some. When he ate and there was no mishap the natives shouted: "The tabu is broken. There have been lies told; we may eat in safety." There was a rush for the table and the food devoured. Kaahumanu had broken the tabu, and safely.

One of the early owners of the calabash referred to was a chiefess of the district where the feast took place, and had this calabash with her and her husband on that occasion. She was afterward pushed over a precipice by some one of the men who had worked for her and who had taken offense at some of her language, spoken during an outburst of temper, for which she was notorious.

The calabash is offered for sale because the money is needed by the person more than the article, but it will not be sold for less than its estimated value.

A WONDERFUL CLOCK.

A wonderful clock has been invented by an Englishman, consisting virtually of a small battery and five wheels. It will run three years with out a particle of attention and at the end of that time all that is required is to attach a new battery. Another English clock allows the possessor to ascertain at a glance the time, the meridian and relative position of every part of the empire, besides being able to witness the actual speed and direction of the world's rotation. The motive power is a clock in the base of a stand and the apparatus requires winding only once each week.

For the Holidays

A case of good beer is a pretty good thing to have in the house during the holiday season.

Friends drop in during the evening, and a glass of beer with some dainty sandwiches or a Welsh rarebit is a very important feature of the evening's enjoyment.

You can order direct from the brewery or from your dealer. If from the latter, be sure to specify Primo Beer, as it is very light, and is brewed specially for this climate.
